■ about the book

*Two cogent arguments about end-of-life care
—and carefully reasoned responses from experts*

End-of-Life Care: Bridging Disability and Aging with Person Centered Care features two primary papers on the controversial issue of end-of-life care within the disabled and aging populations. Each paper explains clearly and honestly about the multitude of issues involved using person centered care. The first is from a father and nationally known advocate for the disabled—Rud Turnbull—speaking from a disability perspective about his disabled son. The second is from respected theologian M. J. Iozzio speaking from the aging perspective about her father's Alzheimer's disease. Responses from experts in the field follow, thoughtfully raising further points to consider about policies, ethics, quality of life, and consent.

The two central papers from End-of-Life Care focus on person centered, interdependent care using the personal reflections of two close family members and their views about end-of-life care. The responses that follow each are direct, thoughtful, and concentrate on the issues in end-of-life planning using person centered care. This difficult and important issue is discussed in detail by lawyers, theologians, clinical practitioners, and professional service providers, and includes several revealing personal stories about end-of-life experiences. Helpful resources for both policy and practice are also presented to assist the reader to learn more.

End-of-Life Care discusses:

- who, how, and on what grounds end-of-life decisions should be made for the developmentally/intellectually disabled
- best practices information from Volunteers of America's Last Passages project
- the unique challenges faced by individuals with disabilities and their families when confronting issues of death and dying
- the protection of the rights of the disabled from discrimination
- person centered care for the aging with complicating health conditions like Alzheimer's Disease
- helping all people to clearly communicate their end-of-life wishes

End-of-Life Care explores every aspect of end-of-life care using person centered care and makes essential reading for practitioners in the fields of disability and aging, healthcare professionals, hospice staff, and professional aging and disability providers.

■ about the co-editors

William C. Gaventa, MDiv, is Director of Community and Congregational Supports at the Elizabeth M. Boggs Center of Developmental Disabilities in New Brunswick, New Jersey. In addition, he is Associate Professor of Pediatrics at the Robert Wood Johnson Medical Hospital of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey. Mr. Gaventa is the Newsletter Editor of the Religion Division of the American Association on Mental Retardation (AAMR) and a contributing editor to the journal Mental Retardation. He is the recipient of several awards, including the National Service Award from the AAMR and was named Outstanding Institutional Chaplain by the American Baptist Churches. Currently, he serves on the National Board of Directors of the AAMR and the Committee on Disabilities of the National Council of Churches, is an AAMR Religion Division Representative in the Congress of Ministries in Specialized Settings, and is a past member of the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Interfaith Volunteer Caregivers. He is co-editor of The Theological Voice of Wolf Wolfensberger (Haworth).

David L. Coulter, MD, is Associate Professor of Pediatrics and Neurology and Director of Pediatric Neurology at Boston University School of Medicine. His clinical practice is primarily focused on intellectual and other developmental disabilities, and most of his patients are from poor, inner city, and disadvantaged families, representing a variety of cultural backgrounds. Through his research, Dr. Coulter seeks to understand the issues faced by children with disabilities and their families. Currently, he is leading a group at the Boston Medical Center that is exploring the role of spirituality in pediatrics. In addition, Dr. Coulter serves as President of the American Association on Mental Retardation, is active in the Greater Boston ARC, and has been a consultant to the Massachusetts Department of Mental Retardation. He is co-editor of The Theological Voice of Wolf Wolfensberger (Haworth).
