BACKGROUND

The Affiliation between Albany Law School and the University at Albany was created to strengthen the partnership between the two institutions, to leverage their respective strengths to expand course and degree offerings and joint research opportunities through two collaborative funds, The Collaborative Venture Fund and the Collaborative Seminar and Conference Fund.

In addition to the Collaborative Venture Fund, the Law School and the University are pleased to announce the availability of a “Collaboration Seminar and Conference Fund” for Law School and University faculty and staff to propose collaborative projects that help advance the deeper partnership being forged between the two institutions. Often faculty will collaborate to create a seminar or a conference on a critical topic. These activities, even with departmental self-funding and additional external funds, are often in need of additional funds to foster faculty participation. This Seminar and Conference fund will support such collaborative initiatives by providing additional funding to enhance the experience, expand the number of participants or provide the opportunity to travel to the venue.

Proposed projects or programs may include but are not limited to planning workshops, conferences, funding to support travel of outside experts and other conference-related expenses or funding to support travel to a potential foundation funding source.

Some examples include:

- A faculty group and staff might propose funds to support travel of outside experts and other resources for a planning symposium on justice and health;
- An “International Law” faculty interest group might propose funds to support travel to a potential foundation funding source.

The maximum award for a single project is $2,500 (except in unusual circumstances). The award does not include salary cost recovery.
