Many individuals and organizations helped make the Symposium on the Teaching Workforce a success. The Symposium was organized under the auspices of the Education Finance Research Consortium in collaboration with the New York State Education Department. The organizational support and substantive feedback provided by members of the Consortium Governing Board greatly contributed to the symposium's success. In this regard, the contributions of James Kadamus, David Monk, Leanna Stiefel and James Wyckoff deserve special note.

Deborah Cunningham of the New York State Education Department's State Aid Work Group was instrumental as a liaison between the Education Finance Research Consortium and the New York State Education Department. She and other State Education Department staff members provided valuable comments on drafts of the policy briefs, helping us to maintain a focus on policy. Charles Mackey, Executive Coordinator for the State Education Department's Office of Teaching, and Joseph Frey, Assistant Commissioner for Higher Education, provided valuable analysis and comments. At the University at Albany, Susan Van Deventer, a graduate student at Rockefeller College, provided valuable editorial comments on the policy briefs and handled the logistics of the symposium and the publication of the policy briefs.

On behalf of the Consortium, I want to thank Chancellor Carl Hayden for his interest in the symposium and continuing support of the work of the Consortium. Additionally, we are indebted to Commissioner Richard Mills for his interest in research based policy and use of the work of the Consortium. Deputy Commissioner James Kadamus guided the initial development of the Symposium topic and was instrumental in working with the panelists to connect their research interests to policy questions in New York. Finally, I would like to thank the Board of Regents for their continuing support of the Consortium's work. I hope the papers presented here are worthy testimony of their commitment to policy-relevant research in education finance.
