GRADUATE COURSES IN ENGLISH

Spring Session 2009

Course offerings for:

Master of Arts
Doctor of Philosophy
Non-Degree Study

Department of English
College of Arts and Sciences
Edith O. Wallace Humanities Building
Room HU 336
(518) 442-4099

Bret Benjamin, Director of Graduate Studies
FACULTY TEACHING SPRING 2009

BRANKA ARSIC, Associate Professor – Ph.D., University of Belgrade

JEFFREY BERMAN, Distinguished Teaching Professor – Ph.D., Cornell University

PATRICIA CHU, Assistant Professor – Ph.D., University of Chicago

TERESA EBERT, Professor – Ph.D., University of Minnesota

HELEN ELAM, Associate Professor – Ph.D., Brown University

MICHAEL HILL, Associate Professor – Ph.D., Stony Brook University, SUNY

PIERRE JORIS, Professor – Ph.D., Binghamton University, SUNY

ERIC KEENAGHAN, Assistant Professor – Ph.D., Temple University

TOMÁS NOEL, Assistant Professor – Ph.D., New York University

STEPHEN NORTH, Distinguished Teaching Professor – D.A., University at Albany, SUNY

MARJORIE PRYSE, Professor – Ph.D., University of California, Santa Cruz

MARTHA ROZETT, Professor – PH.D., University of Michigan

HELENE SCHECK, Associate Professor – Ph.D., Binghamton University, SUNY

LYNNE TILLMAN, Associate Professor and Writer-in-Residence – B.A., Hunter College
SPRING 2008 COURSES

Courses are by Permission of Instructor as noted, otherwise by Permission of Department only

ENG 500 – Textual Practices I: Reading American Poetry through Writing, the Unconscious, and Power
(Open Only to English MA Students) - Permission of Department is required

6139       Th       4:15-7:05 p.m.       BA 216       E. Keenan

As a required course for all English Masters students, English 500 offers methodological instruction in approaches to reading and researching literary texts. Indeed, what sets apart graduate from undergraduate work in English Studies is the strong engagement with others’ research in order to develop one’s own intervention in an ongoing critical dialogue about an author or a text. Presently, critical theory is a crucial and inescapable component of those dialogues in the discipline. Our work will concentrate on developing four methodological skill sets necessary for your survival and growth in this English Graduate Program: strategies for reading and writing about modern and contemporary poetry; strategies for assembling and narrating an account of ongoing critical work about a poet; strategies for reading hallmark essays of critical theory informing much literary criticism today; and strategies for using that theory to establish your own critical intervention in an ongoing critical dialogue about an author.

Each week, we will use the first half of the class meeting to discuss between one and three key theoretic essays. Those essays will give us a critical vocabulary to use when talking about the literature. As the semester proceeds, we will work through three conceptual “optics,” or lenses, for our study of the theory: writing, the unconscious, and power. Each optic roughly corresponds to, and so will help you become conversant with, a major critical approach: deconstruction, psychoanalytic criticism, and historical materialism/cultural studies, respectively. Using optics rather than recognized “schools” of criticism will allow us to more easily examine where those critical approaches originated, how they have evolved as responses to thinkers in other “schools,” and where they overlap. Since many literary authors can be said to be generally concerned with issues of writing, unconscious, and power, these three optics also supply readymade thematic connections between the theoretic and literary texts. Everyone must participate in one group presentation on theory during the semester.

Our discussion of American poetry will be limited to the study of six major authors—Walt Whitman, William Carlos Williams, Langston Hughes, Elizabeth Bishop, Robert Duncan, and Susan Howe, to each of whom we will dedicate two or three weeks. Studying one author for several weeks will allow you to become more familiar and comfortable with that author’s work, while the number of poets will allow for a bit of variety in the kinds of poetry and critical concerns studied. For each class meeting, students will be required to read some of these figures’ most noteworthy poems and one of their essays. On the second (and, when applicable, third) session devoted to that author, you will also be required to complete a small-scale research and writing assignment that will establish some familiarity with how other critics have addressed these writers’ work. Each student will be required to participate in two group presentations on that research homework, each presentation on critical approaches to a different author.

The semester will culminate in a 10- to 12-page original and thesis-driven research paper on your choice of one of the assigned authors. The paper should be theoretically informed, and it should stage an intervention in an ongoing critical dialogue by using 3-5 sources of literary criticism and/or critical history. Your paper must be accompanied by an annotated bibliography of 25+ sources (articles, books, book chapters) about your author, text, and/or issue. Your annotations will consist of three to five sentences for each source, summarizing its thesis and value (or lack of value) for an extension of your project. Of course, students are encouraged to use their previous research homework assignments and presentations to develop the paper and annotated bibliography for this final project.
ENG 515 – Workshop in Poetry
Permission of Instructor is required – Submit Writing Sample to Prof. Noel (tunoel@albany.edu)

6343  W  7:15-10:05 p.m.  HU 123  T. Noel

How can poetry signify linguistic and political difference? This workshop/seminar will explore the promise and problematics of nonmonolingual poetics. We will seek out expressive terrain between the monolingualism of the nation state and an idealized bilingualism that assumes a free and easy commensurability. We will experiment with “translingual” writing and reading practices. Any interested in applying should email a 7-10 page sample of creative and/or critical writing to Tomas Urayoan Noel [tunoel@albany.edu].

While focusing on discussion of students’ work, the workshop will also involve readings from the work of poets engaged in various modes of nonmonolingual writing (and especially of Latin/o American poets such as William Carlos Williams, Alurista, Victor Hernández Cruz, Miguel Algarín, Bernice Zamora, Juan Felipe Herrera, Francisco X. Alarcón Edwin Torres, Rodrigo Toscano, Heriberto Yépez, Adrian Castro, Josefina Báez, Mónica de la Torre, and Tomás Riley). Since our approach to translangage is critical-creative, we will also examine theoretical writings by the likes of Haroldo de Campos, Kwame Anthony Appiah, Emily Apter, Doris Sommer, and Julia Kristeva. (There is no language requirement for this course.)

ENG 516 – Workshop in Fiction
Permission of Instructor is required – Submit Writing Sample to Prof. Tillman (tillwhen@aol.com)

2166  T  4:15 -7:05 p.m.  HU 115  L. Tillman

This is an intensive writing workshop for students with some degree of experience in writing fiction. Students are expected to have already been developing, thinking about, and working on fiction. Poets, similarly experienced in writing poetry, who are interested in writing fiction, are also welcome to apply. During the workshop, each student will present three or four stories to the group (depending upon our number), for engaged discussion. Each student is expected to be a full participant in the commentary on colleagues’ fictions, stories, and consequent questions about issues in fiction. This is a permission by instructor course. Any interested in applying should email 7-10 pages of their writing to: Tillwhen@aol.com. In addition, indicate previous writing courses; major or area of specific interest in graduate school; reasons for wanting to take this workshop.

ENG 580 – Fitzgerald & Hemingway

5475  M  4:15-7:05 p.m.  ED 022  J. Berman

The course will focus on the art and life of F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ernest Hemingway, emphasizing psychoanalytic and feminist approaches. We will read Fitzgerald’s’ This Side of Paradise, The Great Gatsby, Tender Is the Night, Zelda Fitzgerald’s Save Me the Waltz, Hemingway’s Collected Short Stores, The Sun Also Rises, A Farewell to Arms, and For Whom the Bell Tolls. There will be two fifteen-page essays, a class presentation, and several reader-response diaries.
ENG 581– Back to the Eighteenth-Century: What was/What is the Enlightenment?

This course explores key themes associated with a period self-described in the eighteenth century as the “Enlightenment.” The period considered will range from the lapsing of the Licensing Act in late seventeenth-century England, through the reading revolutions of the politically turbulent eighteenth century, particularly, as the discipline of “English Literature” originated in the Scottish Universities. Through close reading of eighteenth-century fiction and non-fiction prose, poetry, various critical and archival materials, as well as contemporary theory on the Enlightenment and after, topics of discussion will include: the relation between literature and civil society, the modern divisions of knowledge we now call “disciplines,” the new legal and aesthetic emphases placed upon authorship and subjectivity, the rise of “rights,” the new middle class, and the division of “races” in the context of imperial rule.

Throughout the course, we will attempt to turn our historical investigations toward questions of how literary expression and democratic citizenship are playing out given current media, political, and economic changes that evidently serve counter-points to Enlightenment ideals.

Reading for this course will include historical and contemporary writing that did not appear in the Spring 2008 ENG 720, “Enlightenment and the Analytics of War.” An extended list of texts is available on request.

ENG 585 – Special Topics: Appalachian Writers/Appalachian Studies

The premise of this course emerges from the convergence of culture, language, geography, modernization, representation, and environmentalism in shaping the contrast between the outsider’s view of Appalachia and attempts by Appalachian writers and activists themselves to define their heritage, claim their identity, and explore the social and economic tensions that the region brings into relief. Although the majority of readings for the course will focus on fiction from the 1880s to the 1980s, about a third will explore interdisciplinary constructions of Appalachia, with an emphasis on the role coal mining has played in the economy and political structure of the region. Students will have free rein to explore the cultural study of Appalachia in at least one of two out-of-class papers. Documentary film and some attention to Bluegrass music will supplement discussion of literary and non-fiction texts. Class discussion and group work will organize the course format and students should anticipate a final exam as well as out-of-class writing. AENG 585 is cross-listed with Women’s Studies.

The reading list for the course will likely include the following novels: Mary Lee Settle, Charley Bland (1989); Mary Noailles Murfree, In the Tennessee Mountains (short stories, 1884); Murfree, In the ‘Stranger People’s’ Country (1891); Grace MacGowan Cooke, The Power and the Glory (1909); Chuck Kinder, Snakehunter (1973); Cormac McCarthy, Child of God (1973); and Lee Smith, Oral History (1983). In addition, the course will include journalist Michael Schnayerson’s Coal River (2008), and likely include excerpts/segments from Mari-Lynn Evans, Holly George-Warren, and Robert Santelli, eds., The Appalachians: America’s First and Last Frontier (2004) and Elizabeth S. D. Engelhardt, Beyond Hill and Hollow: Original Readings in Appalachian Women’s Studies (2005).

ENG 615 – Poetics and Literary Practice

Two eras in British poetry – Romantic and Victorian – have been marked off as distinct, and the divide has spilled over into 20th century poetry, with designations of modernist, high romantic, and so on. This course will focus on readings of major poems in both traditions and follow their inclinations into later poetry. Readings from Wordsworth, Keats, Shelley, Tennyson, Browning, Yeats, and others. Short responses per week, short mid paper, term paper, and seminar presentations.
Class is the decisive condition of social life: it shapes people's birth, healthcare, education, eating, love, labor, aging, and death. Yet, as an explanation of cultural and social relations, it has more or less disappeared from contemporary theory which now represents society as an assemblage of cultural singularities and flows of fugitive meanings. The reasons vary for this fading of class in theory. Derrida, for instance, declares “any sentence in which 'social class' appeared was a problematic sentence for me,” and he meditates that perhaps class belongs to “another time” since our time is for him marked by links of “affinity” without a “common belonging to a class.” Antonio Negri regards Derrida's theory in general to be outdated and “exhausted”—“a prisoner of the ontology he critiques.” Negri reads “class” as an analytics of the “multitude” and argues for a new “post-deconstructive” cultural theory because capitalism itself has outdone deconstruction in the pursuit of de-totalization, difference and hybridity. The course will examine these and other arguments about class as lifestyle, status, income, taste, biopolitics.... It will also explore the theory of class as a relation of owning—not just owning commodities but owning the labor of the other because labor “possesses the peculiar property of being a source of value” (Marx, Capital). The relations of class, subjectivity, otherness, and difference will be studied along with class’s relation to ideology and its place in cultural theory. The broad context of discussion is a social environment in which, as one theorist notes, “the class structure is being rigidified and polarized, when the hypermobility of capital gives the transnational bourgeoisie an unprecedented capacity for domination” and “the social safety nets set up in the course of a century of labor struggles” are being dismantled and “forms of poverty reminiscent of the nineteenth century resurge and spread,” and “where one would need an unflinching historical and materialist analysis” instead of “a soft culturalism.” What is the relation of class critique and literary and cultural theory now? Students will write two papers, give one seminar report and have the option of participating in a theory conference.

ENG 681 – Seminar:  Texts/Authors:  Medieval Women Writers

Female experience and potential in the Middle Ages was shaped by various cultural forces that limited women’s creative, social, spiritual, and political activity. And yet, women writers did flourish throughout the Middle Ages. This course surveys women’s contributions to the rich literary traditions of the western Middle Ages, from early to late (ca. 750-1500 CE), and explores the ways in which women worked in, through, and against the limitations imposed by masculinist social structures. Situating their work within the various cultural milieux in which medieval women wrote, we will grapple with notions of authority, authorship, and canonicity in relation to class, gender, power, sexuality, and spirituality. Drawing on current critical, historical, and theoretical work, we will consider prominent women writers and their motivations (political, social, spiritual, etc.); reception of their work by contemporaries as well as by modern audiences; and issues of selection and preservation of texts to further our understanding of women’s roles in cultural production as patrons, readers, and writers. We will also trace the ways in which women negotiate male-dominated discourses and genres, alternately promoting and challenging perceptions of womanly weakness (intellectual, spiritual, and physical), appropriating and revising historical and literary traditions, and advancing literary devices of their own. Primary texts will be read mostly in translation from Latin, French, Anglo-Norman, Italian, and Spanish, though we will also read some texts in their original early English form. Assignments will include an oral presentation, weekly short essays, and a final seminar paper.
In contrast to the inherited image of the “American self” as self-reliant, willful, insular and liberal, which served as a background to a number of interpretations of American exceptionalism and colonialism, we will explore the vein of American spirituality that advocated selflessness, involuntariness, disorientation and weakness as the premise for contriving personal identity. Epistemologically speaking, our question will concern those strategies of evacuation of the self that, by leading to “emptiness,” served, for authors we will discuss, as the necessary condition for “feeling alive.” Cognitively, we will want to know what kind of personal identity – if any – can be posited upon such an evacuation of the self. Ethically, we will ask how the depersonalized self can still claim to be a responsible subject mobilized in the service of revolutionary politics. Politically, how susceptibility toward the supernatural and even the mystical could lead to a passionate involvement against slavery. The cultural background to our discussions will be provided by texts as diverse as Margaret Cavendish’s empirical philosophy, the long discourses of the Buddha, Benjamin Rush and the early ages of American psychiatry, as well as opinions of the United States Supreme Court from the first half of the 19th century. Our main arguments, however, will emerge from close readings of texts by Mary Rowlandson, Anne Bradstreet, John Cotton, Jonathan Edwards, Thomas Paine, Emily Dickinson and Henry David Thoreau.

This course will consider the disciplinary/professional enterprise traditionally called English—and more recently English Studies—as that enterprise has operated in the U.S., where it has been funded primarily in and through universities and colleges. Topics will include the emergence of and relationships among its various specializations (e.g., English and American literature, creative writing, linguistics, rhetoric and composition); the role of professional organizations (Modern Language Association, Conference on College Composition and Communication, Associated Writing Programs) and scholarly/professional journals; and its modes of self-perpetuation (e.g., graduate education, professionalization). Readings will be drawn from such histories of and/or commentaries on the enterprise as Robert Scholes’s The Rise and Fall of English Studies, Sharon Crowley’s Composition in the University, James Sosnoski’s Token Professionals and Master Critics and Gerald Graff’s Professing Literature, but students can also expect to do research on specific journals, organizations and/or programs.
ENG 720 – Theory & Practice of Literary Translation
Permission of the instructor is required

7096  T  7:15-10:05 p.m.  HU 115  P. Joris

Through a close reading of major texts on & of translation, this seminar addresses both theoretical & practical questions raised by the activity of writer-as-translator & translator-as-writer. An investigation of the ideological and socio-economic strictures of the translator's task and place will help refocus the central question of author-ity. Students will be expected to be simultaneously involved with writing & with translation work from a language of their choice into English. This seminar will attempt to invert the traditional relationship of original text & translated copy & reinscribe the activity of translation as the core process of the act of writing.

Reading list for ENG 720:

• Jacques Derrida, Des tours de babel, o.p. (handout)

ENG 770 – Teaching Writing and Literature

2182  Th  4:15-7:05 p.m.  BA 210  P. Chu

In this course we will address questions of teaching literature, criticism and theory in an English department using a set of canonical texts. We will read a small number of writings on teaching generally but this will not be a course in pedagogical theory. Students will finish this course with a set of lesson plans for our texts, writing assignments in versions for different kinds of courses and students, and a set of syllabi.
Course Concentration Distribution

Spring 2009

Literature, Modernity, and the Contemporary

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Course</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Instructor</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>580</td>
<td>Fitzgerald and Hemingway</td>
<td>Berman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>581</td>
<td>Back to the Eighteenth-Century</td>
<td>Hill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>585</td>
<td>Appalachian Writers/Appalachian Studies</td>
<td>Pryse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>615</td>
<td>Poetics and Literary Practice</td>
<td>Arsic</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>681</td>
<td>Medieval Women Writers</td>
<td>Scheck</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Writing Practices

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Course</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Instructor</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>515</td>
<td>Workshop in Poetry</td>
<td>Noel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>516</td>
<td>Workshop in Fiction</td>
<td>Tillman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>700</td>
<td>The History of English Studies</td>
<td>North</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>720</td>
<td>Theory &amp; Practice of Literary Translation</td>
<td>Joris</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Cultural, Transcultural, and Global Studies

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Course</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Instructor</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>515</td>
<td>Workshop in Poetry</td>
<td>Noel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>642</td>
<td>Current Trends in Critical Theory</td>
<td>Ebert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>720</td>
<td>Theories &amp; Practices of Literary Translation</td>
<td>Joris</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Theoretical Constructs

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Course</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Instructor</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>615</td>
<td>Poetics and Literary Practice</td>
<td>Elam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>642</td>
<td>Current Trends in Critical Theory</td>
<td>Ebert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>720</td>
<td>Theories &amp; Practice of Literary Translation</td>
<td>Joris</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

NOTES:

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________