Executive Summary:

In 2014 – 2015, the Global Institute for Health and Human Rights expanded its programming, grant funding, and educational activities. The GIHHR coordinated this expansion in the core areas of focus: research, education and outreach. Importantly, the Advanced Graduate Certificate for International Health and Human Rights was approved and will be offered in Fall 2015.

The GIHHR was awarded several grants and applied for others. It was awarded a co-sponsored two-year, $1.4 million grant from the federal government for health and the environment in the Middle East. The WHO will provide the GIHHR support for three four-day Training of Trainers workshops on HIV/AIDS and associated comorbidities in Turkey. With the assistance of the IAS and collaboration of OFID, the GIHHR will co-host a conference addressing HIV/AIDS, drug use, and stigma for 20 countries in the Middle East and Central Asia. GIHHR members received a small WHO grant to study the Triangular Clinic method. The GIHHR submitted 10 grant applications to federal and university-based funders and private foundations. The University at Albany generously provided the GIHHR with office space and infrastructural assistance during 2014 – 2015.

The GIHHR will direct a new Living-Learning Community, “World of Global Medicine and Human Rights,” for incoming freshman at the University at Albany in 2015 – 2016. The “Health and Human Rights: An Interdisciplinary Approach” course was offered in the Fall 2014 and Spring 2015 by Drs. Kamiar and Arash Alaei and in Spring 2015. Drs. Alaei taught a new course, “Global Health Diplomacy.” The GIHHR received a small grant to create an online course that will be available nationally and overseas. The Fall 2014 and Spring 2015 semesters saw an increase in interns, with 24 in the Fall and 35 in the Spring. Many of these internships are for academic credit. In the past year, over 10 Albany Law School students participated in the pro bono program with GIHHR. The GIHHR hosted medical students and students from a number of universities as well.

The GIHHR created networks across SUNY campuses and a number of universities. It assisted the University at Albany with joint degree programs in Turkey and Kazakhstan. Joint programs between the Graduate Certificate and the LL.M. from Albany Law School as well as the MIA at Rockefeller College are being finalized. A 3-in-1 program enabling students to earn a Graduate Certificate, LL.M. and MIA is being planned.

Throughout the year, the GIHHR hosted a number of events, ranging from faculty research seminars to events such as the Ebola panel that was broadcast to all 64 SUNY schools to the GIHHR co-sponsored US-Turkey cancer conference in April 2015. Dr. Arash Alaei made multiple trips to the Middle East and Central Asia to establish networks for further student exchanges, joint degree programs, and collaboration.

Overall, the 2014 – 2015 year has been quite good for the GIHHR’s progress toward meeting its goals and acting on its mission statement. As we look to the 2015 – 2016 year, we are optimistic that we will continue to build on these successes and to expand the scope and depth of the GIHHR’s work and contributions across the globe.
MISSION STATEMENT:

The Global Institute for Health and Human Rights aims to facilitate a deeper understanding of the intersection between health and human rights, with concentration on reproductive health, Maternal and child care, HIV/AIDS prevention and Harm Reduction to develop innovative solutions to contemporary challenges in this arena through research, education, policy, advocacy and development.
The University at Albany, the Office of the Vice President for Research, the University at Albany Foundation and the Research Foundation have provided support to the GIHHR throughout the 2014-2015 year, including for event funding and travel. Through the University at Albany, the GIHHR continues to use the office space allocated to it in 2014, located in Room 365 of the Business Administration Building, as well as infrastructural support.
Dr. Kamiar Alaei is a public service professor in the Department of Public Administration and Policy, and the founding Director of Global Institute for Health and Human Rights. He is an expert on HIV/AIDS, drug policy and International Health and Human Rights. He and his brother Arash co-founded the first “Triangular Clinic” for three target groups in Iran (drug users, HIV patients, and STD cases), documented by the World Health Organization as a "Best Practice Model" for HIV/AIDS and injecting drug users prevention and care. Dr. Alaei's extensive experience in both global health policy and international human rights law allows him to focus on the intersections between international health and international law, while remaining sensitive to the needs and realities of vulnerable target groups including rights of prisoners.

His area of expertise, focusing on HIV/AIDS policy and drug policy through an academic perspective with a concentration on the central America, Middle East and Central Asia. In addition to WHO/CAIRO, he has served as a consultant or temporary advisor to the World Health Organization in Pan American Region (PAHO) to expand health and human rights training programs in prison system. Kamiar Alaei received his Medical Doctorate (MD) from Isfahan Medical University and his Master of Public Health (MPH) in epidemiology from Tehran Medical University – two of the top universities in Iran – his Master of Science in International Health from Harvard University, and his doctoral degree on Health Policy and Management from University at Albany. He is currently completing his degree in International Human Rights Law at University of Oxford.

Dr. Arash Alaei is the Associate Director of the Institute. He is a physician who broke the existing national silence regarding HIV/AIDS in a very conservative Muslim country like Iran with the help of his brother Kamiar Alaei using the Triangular Clinic model. He and his brother extended their work on HIV/AIDS in other countries such as Afghanistan and Tajikistan by implementing regional training workshops. They have been successful in motivating other Muslim countries to break the existing silence regarding HIV/AIDS by inviting them to visit their Triangular Clinics in Iran.

Dr. Alaei and his brother promoted their scientific collaborations with American experts through establishing regional workshops on HIV/AIDS and inviting well known international experts from Harvard, Yale and Maryland to be partners in these programs. He also continued his cooperation with U.S. scientists to foster medical diplomacy between Iran and the U.S. The brothers also organized summer exchange programs for American students to visit Iran and work with Iranian students on various health and human rights related projects. This international student network strongly influenced Americans and second generation Iranians living in the US by cultivating youth interest in Iran.

In recognition of their work, Dr. Arash Alaei and his brother Kamiar were awarded the Jonathan Mann Award for Global Health and Human Rights by the Global Health Council in June 2011 and World Health Organization/PAHO gave its first Health and Human Rights awards to them in December 2012.
Dr. Alexandra Harrington is assistant director and affiliated faculty at the Global Institute for Health and Human Rights. She is also adjunct faculty at Albany Law School, where her classes focus on international law topics. Dr. Harrington serves as Lead Counsel for Cross-Cutting Legal Issues with the Centre for International Sustainable Development Law.

Her more than three dozen publications address a variety of fields relating to international law, including international human rights law, international child’s rights, environmental law, legal issues relating to climate change, natural resources regulation, international organizations, international trade law, corporate social responsibility, and criminal law, as well as domestic fields such as constitutional law and military law. She routinely presents her works at domestic and international conferences, including a United Nations Academic Impact in Action panel. Dr. Harrington has served as a Visiting Professor at Albany Law School, a professor at the University of Montreal Centre d’Etudes et de Recherches Internationales summer programs, as a Consultant to the Commission for Environmental Cooperation of the North American Agreement on Environmental Cooperation, and is an ICTSD Expert for the International Centre for Trade and Sustainable Development.
During the Spring 2014 semester, the GIHHR had 4 student interns from the University at Albany as well as over 10 students from Albany Law School who participated in a pro bono project with the GIHHR through which they were able to earn hours toward the 50 hours of pro bono service requirement to sit for the bar exam. Over summer 2014, the GIHHR hosted nearly 10 interns from the University at Albany, Brandeis University, the University of Maryland, Touro Law School and Albany Law School as well as students from Bethlehem High School and the Capital District New Visions high school program, in addition to over 10 Albany Law School students working remotely.

The Fall 2014 and Spring 2015 semesters saw an exponential increase in academic year interns, with 24 students in the Fall and 35 in the Spring. These interns are undergraduate and graduate students from a number of schools and disciplines, such as Public Health, Political Science, Globalization, Biology, and Medical Anthropology. Many of these students receive academic credit for their internships, which are typically taken for 3 credits per semester. During the Fall 2014 term, approximately 18 interns received credit for their GIHHR internships and approximately 30 students are scheduled to receive credit for their Spring 2015 GIHHR internships. This amounts to over $45,000.00 in credit hours generated by GIHHR interns throughout the 2014 – 2015 academic year. The pro bono project between the GIHHR and Albany Law School is still thriving and new students routinely enroll in it.
Several of the GIHHR’s interns have been accepted to present a panel at the University at Albany’s 2015 Undergraduate Research Conference. The purpose of this conference is to allow undergraduate students who are conducting significant research projects to share and highlight them with the larger community of students and faculty members in an interdisciplinary setting. The theme of the panel is “Health and Human Rights Regarding HIV/AIDS.”

Currently, a number of undergraduate students who are former students from the “Health and Human Rights: An Interdisciplinary Approach” course and GIHHR interns are proposing the creation of Health and Human Rights as a student initiated minor.

LIVING-LEARNING COMMUNITY

The University at Albany’s Living-Learning Communities for incoming freshmen have proven to be a great way to create a small community of learners. Living-Learning Communities (L-LCs) offer incoming freshmen with similar interests, majors, or lifestyles, the opportunity to live together in the same residence hall, take one or two courses together, and meet regularly with faculty, advisors, and upper-class students who share their interests. Faculty have enjoyed personal interaction with new students and find the opportunity to really get to know freshmen to be fun and refreshing. The Living-Learning Communities have received special endorsement and encouragement from new University at Albany Provost James Stellar as part of the University’s efforts to increase retention.

In March 2015, the GIHHR was asked by the University at Albany’s Assistant Vice Provost for Student Engagement to direct and oversee a new Living-Learning Community for Freshmen at the University at Albany. The title of the Living-Learning Community will be the “World of Global Medicine and Human Rights” and the program itself will accommodate approximately 27 incoming students, primarily those who are intended pre-med and biology majors. The GIHHR plans to involve its affiliated faculty and interns in its Living-Learning Community programs and will also ensure that students in this program are ex-
During the 2013 - 2014 academic year, GIHHR staff visited and gave guest lectures to the New Visions STEM program. This innovative program for exceptional high school seniors in the Capital Region exposes them to various career paths in their areas of interest and also provides them with a specialized, learning intensive course throughout the year. As a result of the GIHHR's relations with the New Visions program, during Summer 2014 the GIHHR hosted 3 interns who were recent graduates of the program. One of these interns is attending the University at Albany and continues to be an intern with the GIHHR, while the others are attending SUNY Stony Brook and Tufts University. The GIHHR continues to maintain a strong relationship with the New Visions Program, visiting students and hosting them at the GIHHR’s offices throughout the 2014 - 2015 academic year. It is anticipated that several New Visions graduates will join the GIHHR as interns during Summer 2015.

During the 2014 - 2015 academic year, the GIHHR established a relationship with the Emma Willard School in Troy, New York and a number of EWS students visited the GIHHR's offices to learn more about its programming. This relationship allows high school students from EWS to intern several hours a week on-site and additional hours per week remotely throughout the semester. Internships began in the Spring 2015 semester and are already highly successful, with students assisting on key GIHHR projects from the beginning. It is anticipated that the program will continue into the 2015 - 2016 academic year.
For several years, Drs. Alaei have offered “Health and Human Rights: An Inter-Disciplinary Approach” to undergraduate and graduate students at UAlbany, including undergraduate students from the Honors College. In the Spring 2015 semester, they have also introduced a new course, “Health Diplomacy,” primarily geared toward transfer students.
The GIHHR Directors received a small grant to create an online course that has a target launch date of Fall 2015. This course will be an online version of the “Health and Human Rights: An Interdisciplinary Approach” and will allow students to fulfill one of the three core course requirements for the Advanced Graduate Certificate for International Health and Human Rights. Once operational, the course will be available to national and international students.
IAP’s international network also made it possible for UAlbany to begin academic relations with Iran, Saudi Arabia and Iraq. As a result of these partnerships, approximately 120 international students have applied to UAlbany from these countries, which resulted in 32 students from Iran, 10 from Iraq, and 8 from Saudi Arabia being admitted to study at the University at Albany. IAP has helped broaden UAlbany’s international student body and its diversity, and increased the number of international students studying here at the University. These students generated a total of more than $1 million in tuition for the University. At the end of the 2014 – 2015 academic year, 20 undergraduate and graduate students from Iran graduated from SUNY Albany with degrees in several disciplines.
During the 2014 - 2015 year, the GIHHR has been instrumental in the negotiation of multiple MOUs between high ranking universities in Turkey and four national universities in Kazakhstan. As a result of these MOUs, students and faculty from these universities and the University at Albany will be able to participate in exchange programs. Additionally, many of these MOUs provide for the establishment of joint degree or dual degree programs.
During the creation of the GIHHR’s grant proposal for the SUNY Health Network of Excellence request for proposals, a number of connections were made between the GIHHR and researchers at the University at Buffalo, SUNY Downstate Medical School, and Stony Brook University. In light of the cohesion generated by through the collaborative, the GIHHR now plans to facilitate a larger undertaking that would create an informal network of researchers, scholars and research centers that work in the field of HIV/AIDS and drug addiction. This suggestion has been well received by partners at these SUNY schools, as well as additional researchers at the University at Albany, Yale University and Johns Hopkins University and it is anticipated that an initial planning conference will be held in Fall 2015.
In early March 2015, the Advanced Graduate Certificate in International Health and Human Rights was approved by the New York State Department of Education and can now officially be offered for the 2015–2016 academic year. To address the growing demand for interdisciplinary solutions to our contemporary world challenges, the GIHHR, in collaboration with the University at Albany School of Public Health and the Rockefeller College of Public Affairs and Policy Department of Political Science, proposed the introduction of the graduate-level Advanced Certificate to be offered to students and professionals (health care professionals, lawyers, policy makers etc.) in collaboration with 3 other institutions – Albany Law School, Albany College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences, and Union Graduate College. Now that the Advanced Certificate has received full approval efforts are under way to recruit students and finalize the first year’s curriculum.

Certificate/LL.M.

In conjunction with Albany Law School, the GIHHR is establishing a program that would allow graduate students holding a J.D. degree to receive a LL.M. from Albany Law School and the Advanced Graduate Certificate in International Health and Human Rights from the University at Albany in a reduced time frame. This program would allow students to engage in interdisciplinary study of these issues and would expose students to a variety of issues in health and human rights overall.

Certificate/MIA

In conjunction with the Rockefeller College, the GIHHR is establishing a program that would allow graduate students to receive a Master’s in International Affairs (MIA) from Rockefeller College and the Advanced Graduate Certificate in International Health and Human Rights from the University at Albany in a reduced time frame. This program would allow students to engage in interdisciplinary study of these issues and would expose students to a variety of issues in health and human rights overall.

3-in-1 program

The proposed program of Masters of International Affairs (MIA), Masters of Law (LL.M.), and Advanced Certificate in Health and Human Rights is a two-year program established by University at Albany and Albany Law School. The dual degree is ideal for individuals who wish to combine a triple careers in international affairs, law and health and human rights. The MIA and LL.M. will include a concentration in Health and Human Rights.
This certificate provides students with the opportunity to study vital issues in an interdisciplinary setting that can be tailored to best address their needs and goals.

- Unique inter-disciplinary program that gives access to a number of academic institutions.
- Offered in collaboration with the Global Institute for Health and Human Rights, Rockefeller College and the School of Public Health in partnership with Albany Law School, Albany College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences, and Union Graduate College.

There are two tracks for participants in the Advanced Graduate Certificate – one for traditional students and one for working professionals.

- For traditional students, courses may be taken over the standard academic term as well as over the summer.
- For working professionals, in-person courses will be offered over the summer and up to two courses can be taken online.
- For either track, credits from one previously taken, qualifying course may be transferred as well.

In response to the SUNY Health Network of Excellence program call, the GIHHR orchestrated the creation of an inter-campus network on HIV/AIDS and drug addiction between UAlbany, U Buffalo, SUNY Downstate Medical Center and Stony Brook University. After submitting a Letter of Intent, the GIHHR was invited to submit a full proposal, which was completed at the end of March.

The submitted a proposal in response to a federal Request for Proposals for a project in the Middle East that would address the use of law to advance human rights understandings in the area. The GIHHR submitted an application that focused on the use of health law as a prism for extending human rights understandings throughout broader society and is currently waiting for a response to this application. Further, the GIHHR was invited to submit a full application to the Open Society Foundation for funding of research and policy suggestions for the Turkish National Strategic Plan for Drug Policy. The application was submitted in January 2015.

In January 2015, the GIHHR and affiliated faculty members submitted an application to the University at Albany’s Presidential Initiatives Fund for a project titled “Preliminary Data Analysis to Apply for Non-Traditional (International) Funding for Drug Use and HIV/AIDS Research in Turkey.”

During Spring 2015, the GIHHR was invited to apply for funding from the Open Society Foundation and submitted an application for “Refining Current Drug Policies in Turkey” that would assist the GIHHR in providing a comprehensive framework in which to shape its proposal for the Turkish three-year National Strategic Plan on Drug Policy in a way that meets the needs of drug users, drug addicts and society as a whole.

At the end of 2015, the GIHHR submitted an application to the Ohrstrom Foundation for funding of a proposal that would “Develop a Community-Based Educational Curriculum and Training Program for Turkey’s Research, Treatment, and Training Center for Alcohol and Substance Dependence “AMATEM.”

In July 2014, the GIHHR along with the CWGCS submitted an application to the US Embassy in Baghdad’s “Iraqi Youth Leaders Exchange Program Undergraduate Students” in response to a request for proposals. Unfortunately, the security situation in Iraq subsequently deteriorated to the point that this program was suspended.

In July 2014, the GIHHR submitted “Evaluating Integrated Mental Health in Physical/Reproductive Health Services for Female Gender-Based Violence Victims in Iraqi Refugee and IDP Camps” to the UK Trust Foundation. Unfortunately, this grant also experienced difficulties in terms of implementation ability due to the security situation in Iraq that emerged after the grant was submitted.

Grants received:

The Global Institute for Health and Human Rights, along with the Center for Women in Government and Civil Society, was awarded a two-year, $1.4 million grant from the federal government for work that will strengthen leadership networks in the Middle East. In particular, this project will focus on the impact of the environment, health and economic development and will train leaders of non-governmental organizations and other groups to understand these issues and to train their constituencies regarding these issues and their impacts. The GIHHR and the CWGSC are proud to partner with the Institute for Health and the Environment, a WHO Collaborating Center, for this project.

In March 2015, the GIHHR was informed that it will receive funding and support from the World Health Organization (WHO) to conduct three four-days Training of Trainers (TOTs) workshops on HIV/AIDS and associated comorbidities in three major Turkish cities: Ankara, Istanbul and Antalya in 2015. These workshops will be held in collaboration with HIV/AIDS Treatment and Research Center Hacettepe University, HIV/AIDS Prevention and Education Society (Turkey) and the Turkish Ministry of Health. The aim is to conduct three series of trainings for a group of forty-five health care providers including psychiatrists, infectious disease specialists, general practitioners, family physicians, nurses, and psychologists, who in turn in train other health workers once they return to their respective districts.

The GIHHR will co-host a conference addressing HIV/AIDS, drug use, and stigma for 20 countries in the Middle East and Central Asia in Fall 2015 with the International AIDS Society and funding from the OPEC Fund for International Development. The Qatar Foundation and Saudi Arabian funders are also interested in assisting with this conference and research on these topics, as is the World Health Organization.

GIHHR staff members and affiliated faculty were recently awarded a small grant from the WHO to develop best practices of applying human rights principles to health policy making and programming through the use of the Triangular Clinic method pioneered by Drs. Arash and Kamiar Alaei on HIV/AIDS treatment in a conservative society and how these lessons might be translated to other conservative societies.
Events & Outreach

During the 2014 – 15 academic year, the GIHHR began to host a monthly faculty research seminar series for GIHHR affiliated faculty and other faculty members from the University at Albany and local universities such as Albany Law School and Union Graduate College. These have been highly successful and are planned to continue for the 2015 – 2016 academic year.

The GIHHR has also hosted a number of events throughout the 2014 – 15 academic year, such as an event with visiting Iraqi doctors who spoke about birth defects as a result of military-based pollution; a visiting Turkish Fulbright Scholar, who spoke on issues of economics and human rights; a panel on Ebola prevention and eradication that was broadcast via live feed to all 64 SUNY campuses; a panel on health and women’s rights featuring international, national and local experts; and a presentation by a former Ambassador on health and diplomacy.

In April 2015, the GIHHR, in conjunction with the School of Public Health hosted the first ever conference between US and Turkish cancer experts and practitioners at the University at Albany. It is intended that this will lead to an ongoing series of conferences between participating universities that will switch locations between the University at Albany and Turkey.

Throughout the past year, Dr. Arash Alaei has made multiple trips to Turkey to cement relationships between the University at Albany and a number of Turkish universities, as well as between the GIHHR and the Turkish Ministry of Health, the Health Committee of the Turkish Parliament, 9 Turkish universities, and a number of NGOs. These relationships have been used as the basis for a number of projects and grant proposals. In November 2014, a team led by Dr. Arash Alaei presented a multi-day workshop on drug use and harm reduction in Izmir, Turkey for those working with such issues in the medical and policing fields. Recently, the Turkish Ministry of Health requested the GIHHR’s consultation regarding the creation and implementation of a hotline for information on drug use and related issues. Additionally, in October 2014 Dr. Arash Alaei traveled to Kazakhstan, where he was instrumental in negotiating MOUs between 4 national universities and the University at Albany for student and research exchanges.
