Course Description
This course explores approaches to and experiences of contentious politics, or (per Tarrow), “collective activity on the part of claimants—or those who claim to represent them—relying at least in part on noninstitutional forms of interaction with elites, opponents, or the state.” It is collective action by “people who lack regular access to institutions, who act in the name of new or unaccepted claims, and who behave in ways that fundamentally challenge others or authorities.” Contentious politics may include “wars, revolutions, rebellions, social movements, industrial conflict, feuds, riots, banditry, shaming ceremonies, and many more forms of collective struggle,” whether episodic or long term, and running the gamut of participants and organizational forms. So there’s a lot to work with.

The class is structured primarily around major theoretical approaches to the study of contentious politics, in most cases using a single, often canonical work to allow an in-depth discussion of the how of the research. We begin, though, with a quick survey of the theoretical landscape, and shift at the end from theoretical lenses to forms of contention. Most of the works we will read use rely on qualitative case studies (either single cases or compilations of them, in the case of edited volumes), allowing you to hone your skills in class discussions at comparative case study analysis. The goal throughout is not just to introduce you to some fascinating examples of political contention, but to leave you with tools you can use in your future scholarship. The assignments for the class are designed accordingly.

Objectives
By the end of the course, students should:

- Understand the major questions and theories guiding research into contentious politics.
- Have gained experience in at least one key method (case study analysis) in comparative politics and awareness of other methods available.
- Have collectively produced a comprehensive annotated bibliography of theories of contentious politics.
- Have written or co-written an original, publishable article.

You are expected to complete all readings, attend all classes, and participate meaningfully in class discussions. Do not let yourself fall behind in the readings and do not miss class. That said, there is a lot of reading. Skim judiciously! (When in doubt, focus on the argument rather than the details—but remember that the former is built upon the latter …)

Class participation

The class will be run as a seminar. Participation will be evaluated based on whether you voluntarily pose and respond to questions in each class session, demonstrate that you have read and thought through the assigned reading, and listen respectfully to what your peers say. Given the nature of the course and the fact that we meet only once per week, I will ask you to withdraw from the course if you miss more than one class session. (That does not mean you have one “freebie,” since participation is a core requirement!)

Leading class discussion

Each student will be expected to lead the class discussion on at least one book (or a part of one book, if it’s a large class). The approach you choose is up to you, but this need not be a formal presentation. Your job is just to kick things off by suggesting what in the text you found especially intriguing or worth exploring in class, then facilitate such a conversation. You may find it helpful to circulate several discussion questions in advance, however, especially if you would like the class to focus on particular aspects while reading. We will divvy up texts/weeks on September 4.

Annotated bibliography

Both the annotated bibliography and final paper may be written either individually or in teams of up to four people. In preparation for your final paper, you will create an annotated bibliography on your topic. It should include all the articles related to your topic in the major journals over a given number of years. Both the number of years and what count as “major journals” may vary with the nature of the topic, but you should be able to gauge what are reasonable stopping points as you go along—remember, since the bibliography is preparation for your final paper, it is to your advantage to be thorough! For the same reason, it is not only required, but to your benefit, to take the “annotation” seriously. The equivalent of a back-cover blurb is not sufficient; it should be clear that you have actually done some reading. Please clear the topic with me before you have done too much work (but after at least some preliminary probing) so I can be sure you are on the right track.

Annotated bibliographies are due on October 9. You will submit a copy to me, but also circulate copies to all students in the class. These bibliographies will be a common property resource, on which any member of the class may draw for the final paper or for future coursework and research.

Final paper (20-30 pages, double-spaced, not including bibliography)

The final paper will give you the opportunity not only for original research, but also to put the theories you are learning to the test. Your goal is to write a publishable article; use the articles you read in class or in the course of your research as a guide. (While your grade is not dependent on the article’s being accepted for publication, you will be expected to submit the final paper to a journal.)

Your final paper can be either:

- A completed, original research project testing two or more rival hypotheses or theoretical lenses, within the realm of contentious politics. Your methods should be appropriate and clearly specified, and you should engage with some subset of the theories and approaches covered in class. The paper may be based on primary or secondary sources, including field work, but should not be based on work you have already written up for another purpose.

- A “state-of-the-field” article based on a comprehensive review of the literature on a variable related to political inclusion or engagement. Bear in mind that a publishable literature review is a very different beast from an annotated bibliography, and requires both a comprehensive scope and true mastery of the subject matter.

Final papers are due at 5pm on Monday, December 8. If you choose to collaborate on your annotated bibliography and final project, please be aware that all team members will receive the same grade for collaborative work.

General guidelines

All written assignments must be double-spaced, with 1-1½ margins, in Times New Roman or a comparable font. Late papers will incur a non-negotiable penalty of one letter grade for each day late. Papers should be thoroughly proofread—while grammatical errors and typos will not affect your grade, they will annoy me (and it’s a bad idea to annoy the person grading your papers …!)

Plagiarism and other forms of academic dishonesty are inexcusable under any circumstances and will be dealt with severely. You are responsible for familiarizing yourself with the university’s guidelines on academic integrity (in the Undergraduate Bulletin or online at http://www.albany.edu/undergraduate_bulletin/regulations.html). The site suggests resources to bring you up to speed on precisely what is acceptable. Ignorance is NOT an excuse. If found to have plagiarized or otherwise cheated, you will fail the course.

Reasonable accommodation will be made for students with any documented physical, learning, or other disabilities. To ensure equitable and fair treatment of all students, such matters should be brought to my attention at the start of the semester. If you believe you have such a disability, you are encouraged to register with the Disability Resource Center (Campus Center 137, they will provide you with a letter to me, confirming documentation of your need for the academic accommodations requested.

Required readings

Twelve (!) texts are available for purchase from either the UAlbany bookstore or Mary Jane Books. Copies will also be on reserve at the library. You might consider purchasing only those books you think you will want to keep and checking the others out of the library …

All the articles listed are available electronically.

Schedule (readings are due on the date under which they are listed):

I. THEORETICAL AND METHODOLOGICAL OVERVIEW
28 Aug:  No class (APSA)
  • Read the syllabus carefully! If you have question, ask …
  • If possible, drop by sometime before class next week (Mon-Thurs) to introduce yourself!

4 Sept:  Sign up to lead discussion

Theoretical Overview: What is meant by “contentious politics”? How is this framing different from prior scholarship on violent or nonviolent political engagement and protest? What are the major approaches to studying political contention?

• Charles Tilly and Sidney Tarrow, Contentious Politics
• Doug McAdam, Sidney Tarrow, Charles Tilly, “To Map Contentious Politics,” working paper, Center for Studies of Social Change (http://www.ciaonet.org/wps/mcd02/—google the title to circumvent password).

For further reading:
  o Gerry van Klinken, Communal Violence and Democratization in Indonesia: Small Town Wars (New York: Routledge, 2007). [good demonstration of examining a set of cases in terms of different mechanisms]

11 Sept:  Comparative Case Study Analysis: How does comparative case study analysis differ from other methods in comparative politics? How and what does case study research contribute to theory-building and knowledge accumulation? Does qualitative case study research permit causal analysis? (The article is by way of example.)

• Alexander George and Andrew Bennett, Case Studies and Theory Development in the Social Sciences

For further reading:
  o James Mahoney and Dietrich Rueschemeyer, Comparative Historical Analysis in the Social Sciences, New York: Cambridge UP, 2002.

o Andrew Bennett and Colin Elman, “Qualitative Research: Recent Developments in Case Study Methods,” Annual Review of Political Science 9 (June 2006), 455-76.

II. KEY APPROACHES: When reading each of these texts, focus on the author’s/authors’ methods, perspective, and assumptions, bearing in mind the theoretical frameworks we’ve surveyed thus far. While the empirical details are also important, our emphasis is more on the “how” than the “what.” You may want at least to skim some of the more theoretical “further reading” (at least one such piece is suggested per topic, along with more applied works), especially if you are not clear about what some of the approaches entail.

18 Sept: Structure
- Theda Skocpol, States and Social Revolutions
  For further reading:

25 Sept: Political Process/Opportunities
- Doug McAdam, Political Process and the Development of Black Insurgency
  For further reading:

2 Oct: Class to be rescheduled

Framing
- Michiel Baud and Rosanne Rutten, Popular Intellectuals and Social Movements: Framing Protest in Asia, Africa, and Latin America
  For further reading:
Politics of Southeast Asia

9 Oct: Resources and Rationality

- Dennis Chong, Collective Action and the Civil Rights Movement

For further reading:

16 Oct: New Social Movements and Identity

- Hanspeter Kriesi, et al., New Social Movements in Western Europe

For further reading:

23 Oct: Discourse and Hegemony

- James C. Scott, Domination and the Art of Resistance: Hidden Transcripts

For further reading:

III. FORMS OF CONTENTION: These works are chosen not for highlighting a particular theoretical paradigm, but for their focus on a particular form or strategy of contentious politics. Think about repertoires of contention (among all relevant actors) in reading these works, but also consider the methods and lenses these authors bring to their cases.

30 Oct: Transnational Activism
- Sidney Tarrow, The New Transnational Activism

For further reading:

6 Nov: Violence
- Jessica Stern, Terror in the Name of God

For further reading:

13 Nov: Democratization
- Charles Tilly, Contention and Democracy in Europe

For further reading:
- Muthiah Alagappa (ed.), Civil Society and Political Change in Asia: Expanding and Contracting Democratic Space (Stanford UP, 2004).

20 Nov: Repression
- Christian Davenport, et al., Repression and Mobilization
For further reading:

27 Nov:   No class

4 Dec:    TBD

8 Dec:    Final papers due
