Course Description

For centuries, nationalism has been a powerful political force. After the end of the Cold War, nationalism once again moved to the forefront of international politics. By taking this course, the students are expected to understand the different conceptualizations of “nation” and “nationalism”; to be able to trace the historical and social developments associated with the building and emergence of nations and nationalist movements; and to examine the complex role of nationalism and nation-building in the contemporary world. The first part of the course is an overview of the major theories of nationalism and nation-building. The second part of the course focuses on the development of nationalism and nation-building in relation to different political traditions and phenomena such as democracy, fascism, communism, anti-colonialism, and globalization. Next, concrete manifestations of contemporary nationalism in Western Europe, Russia and Eastern Europe, Middle East, and the United States will be examined. The course will conclude with the assessment of the prospects for nationalism in today’s changing world.

Course Requirements

After completing this course, students are expected to be able to clearly define “nation” and “nationalism,” to demonstrate familiarity with the broad history of modern nationalism and its interactions with major political traditions, to compare and evaluate the major theories of nations and nationalism, and to use these theories to analyze and explain relevant empirical cases. There will be one in-class midterm exam and one take-home final essay. The date for the midterm exam is listed on the syllabus. The final essay is due on the last day of class—Tuesday, May 5, 2015. The final essay is not a research paper and students need only draw on the readings and lectures for this course. Late papers will result in grade reductions. In-class participation will count for 20% of the grade, the midterm 30%, and the final 50%.

It is mandatory that all class members complete the assigned readings prior to the lectures. Class attendance will be taken regularly. Multiple absences without university-approved reasons (see http://www.albany.edu/health_center/medicalexccuse.shtml) will result in a reduction of the participation portion of the overall grade. Students are expected to meet all standards of academic integrity. Violation of academic integrity will not be tolerated. For relevant information, see http://www.albany.edu/undergraduate_bulletin/regulations.html.
