Lecture Series

DEATH TO THE WOMEN AND CHILDREN
Victor Streib, J.D.
A National Death Penalty Archive Event

The death penalty for women and children may sound like a bad dream, but they have been part of the American experience since the 1600s. Research and advocacy concerning the death penalty for juveniles ended that practice, due largely to the lesser culpability of children. Research into the death penalty for women has not led to advocacy for its abolition for women, because few would argue that women generally are less culpable than men for their murders. Both of these are subtopics within the global death penalty debate and appear to be leading the way to the decline and fall of that overall practice.

Friday, October 12 at 4:00 pm
Standish Room, Science Library
UAlbany Main Campus, 1400 Washington Avenue

Light refreshments will be served.

Many thanks to our generous sponsors and partners.
M.E. Grenander Special Collections and Archives, UAlbany
New York State Writers Institute
Office of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion, SUNY

Office of Diversity and Inclusion, UAlbany
School of Criminal Justice, UAlbany
University Auxiliary Services at Albany