CURRENT RESEARCH PROJECTS

- 2006-present Space, Politics, and the New Ethnic Economy: A Study on Asian American Enclaves and Suburbs. The project compares the historical, demographic, and sociopolitical emergence of transnational ethnic-based economies within the Korean and Chinese immigrant enclaves and suburbs of Los Angeles and New York. Among other things, the study examines the internal dynamics of new immigrant growth machines and the rise of “communities without residential propinquity” among post-1965 Asian American populations that are able to construct and maintain vibrant ethnic economies despite their increasing suburbanization.
- 2004-present Carrying Culture: A Study on Marriage, Family, and Culture among Asian Immigrants and Their Children. The project explores the ways in which sons and daughters of Asian immigrants in different household structures negotiate their unequal family roles and adult responsibilities as family caretakers and cultural brokers while growing up and how this shapes their decisions about family, career, and ethnicity in their adult lives.
