Disability and Health: Implications for Public Health Practice

Introductions by: Barbara Devore

Deputy Director, Center for Community Health
New York State Department of Health

Margaret A. Turk, MD

Professor, Department of Physical Medicine & Rehabilitation and Pediatrics SUNY Upstate Medical University

Andrea Haenlin-Mott

ADA Coordinator for Facilities Services at Cornell University

Theresa Paeglow

Program Manager, New York State Department of Health Disability and Health Program

Disability is a major health concern across the entire age spectrum. Historically, it has been equated with inferior health status, with the health needs of persons with disabilities considered only in relation to their particular limitations. Often the management of the primary disabling condition has been the overriding concern, with less attention paid to the generally recommended standards of health screening and disease prevention.
