Sex and Gender Issues in Couple Therapy

Wednesday, October 26, 9AM-4PM

This workshop provides an overview of Emotionally Focused Therapy (EFT), the most empirically-validated method for couple therapy. We will examine the basics of Attachment Theory as it relates to our work with couples. An overview of the various aspects of EFT and how the change process develops over time in a couple’s recovery will be addressed. We will then learn how to apply these techniques in the context of sex and gender, more specifically, how sexual issues and gender identity/expression can be addressed through the use of EFT.

Presented by: Michael Moran, LCSW, CST, a graduate of the University at Albany’s School of Social Work and a licensed psychotherapist and sex therapist located in New York, NY. Michael focuses his practice on the intersection of couples therapy and sex therapy. He is the only certified EFT Couples Therapist and Approved Supervisor Candidate who is also an AASECT Certified Sex Therapist in New York City. Michael has also taught Marriage and Family Therapy at Rutgers University School of Social Work.
