ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Gabriele Bauer is assistant professor in the science education program at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. She provides training services and develops instructional materials for faculty. She received her doctorate in educational psychology from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign in 2004 and works full-time as an assistant professor. She specializes in faculty development and student learning and has taught courses in science education at Penn State in spring 2012. Her research interests include instructional supervision of graduate students and faculty development of graduate students.

Jill Bible is a head teaching assistant at Stanford University. She received her bachelor's degree from Stanford in 2005 and joined the teaching assistant program in 2004 and will receive her master's degree in 2008. She concentrates on teaching upper-level classes in environmental science and has worked in the classroom at Stanford, leading workshops and developing assessment tools.

Lori Breslow has degrees in Urban Affairs from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She teaches a yearly doctoral course in urban affairs at the university. In addition, she is a member of the technical and educational innovation.
