UAlbany President Assumes Campus Compact Post

University at Albany President Robert J. Jones began serving a three-year term July 1 with the Board of Directors of Campus Compact, a national coalition of more than 1,100 colleges and universities committed to fulfilling the public purposes of higher education.

As the only national higher-education association dedicated solely to campus-based civic engagement, Campus Compact provides resources that support faculty and staff as they pursue community-based teaching and scholarship in the service of positive change. Its board guides the organizational mission of deepening higher education's ability to improve community life and educate students for civic and social responsibility.

Strzalkowski’s Research Attracts ARL Support

Through a cooperative agreement with the U.S. Army Research Laboratory’s (ARL) Open Campus initiative, Professor of Computer Science Tomek Strzalkowski has been awarded $499,930 to explore the manner in which new data-capture techniques can help advance research in such areas as psychology, anthropology, linguistics and sociology.

An expert on information intelligence and tracking of information about terrorists, Strzalkowski directs the University’s Institute for Informatics, Logics and Security Studies (ILS). His interests include natural language processing, and information processing and retrieval.
NSF CAREER Award Presented to Rose

The National Science Foundation (NSF) has presented a $544,681 Faculty Early Development (CAREER) Award to Assistant Professor of Atmospheric and Environmental Sciences Brian Rose.

Rose will use the funding to examine the role of oceans in the planetary energy cycles. In an effort to better understand how and why the planetary energy budget varies in response to oceanic processes on a variety of time scales, Rose and his research team will study ocean heat fluxes as independent climate forcings.

A major aspect of the project involves the mentoring of a new generation of climate scientists, including a doctoral student and several undergraduates.

Tolle Exhibit Opens at UAlbany Museum

Brian Tolle, B.A.’86, will be bringing his sculptures to the University Art Museum this fall.

Bordering Utopia: Sculptures by Brian Tolle is the first exhibition to bring together the artist’s 1990s work, based on Colonial-American structures, with his more recent creations. His works, which include Levittown (2009) and Alice and Job (2000), have earned recognition from the Irish American Historical Society, the Louis Comfort Tiffany Foundation, and the Design Commission of the City of New York. Perhaps best known for his Irish Hunger Memorial in New York City, Tolle is currently working on public projects in Brooklyn, N.Y.; Calgary, Alberta; and Columbus, Ohio.

Tolle, who majored in political science at UAlbany, says the negotiation skills he acquired through his studies and a two-year internship with the New York State Assembly have helped him to achieve success in designing and executing public projects. He also holds a B.F.A. from Parsons the New School for Design and an M.F.A. from Yale University.

Bordering Utopia opens Oct. 6; a public reception will be held Oct. 9 from 5 to 7 p.m. at the museum. The exhibition runs concurrently with Oded Hirsch: Three Videos through Dec. 12.

Recent Graduate Receives Fulbright

It didn’t take Kaitlyn Gulick, B.A.’15, long to transition from college life to international educator: Shortly after graduation last May, she received a Fulbright English Teaching Assistant (ETA) Scholarship in South Korea.

During her sophomore and junior years at UAlbany, Gulick studied in Japan and South Korea. The Japanese studies major from Cohoes, N.Y., participated in the University’s Tae Kwon Do Club and was a member of the Korean and Japanese student associations. She also helped to develop UAlbany Cultural Connections, a club created to promote cultural exploration by American and international students.

Gulick left July 10 for her assignment in South Korea, where she will become TESOL (Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages) certified. She will return to the U.S. next July.
New Senior Administrators Appointed

University at Albany President Robert J. Jones has announced the following recent senior administrative appointments:

Vice Provost and Dean Harvey Charles, International Education

Charles formerly served as vice provost for International Initiatives and director of the Center for International Education at Northern Arizona University. He has also held senior leadership roles at Georgia Institute of Technology; San Francisco State University; Wheaton College; and the University of Nevada, Reno.

Dean Darrell P. Wheeler, School of Social Welfare; Vice Provost, Public Engagement

Wheeler previously served at Loyola University Chicago as dean and professor in the School of Social Work. Active in the professional community, he is president of the Board Directors of the National Association of Social Workers.

Interim Dean Kim L. Boyer, College of Engineering and Applied Sciences

Boyer, who is also professor and chair of the new Department of Computer Engineering, formerly headed the Department of Electrical, Computer and Systems Engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Previously, he served on the faculty of The Ohio State University for 22 years.

Interim Dean R. Karl Rethemeyer, Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy

Rethemeyer’s primary research interest is in social networks; their impact on social, political and policy processes; and the methods used to study such networks.

Interim Dean David L. Rousseau, College of Emergency Preparedness, Homeland Security and Cybersecurity

Rousseau’s research interests focus on military conflict, shared identity, political and policy processes; and the methods used to study such networks.
Longtime University at Albany supporters J. Spencer Standish and Patricia Standish donated $1.5 million in 2014 to endow positions for three professors who will work with students interested in creating and managing their own businesses. This fall, Bill Wales, Ph.D., becomes the School of Business’ first Standish Professor in Entrepreneurship.

Dean Donald Siegel said Wales, who comes to UAlbany from James Madison University (JMU), is “the ideal person for this professorship.” Added Siegel, “The position is going to someone from the region who is an expert and who can help us enhance student entrepreneurship on campus and in the region.”

Wales, who grew up in South Colonie, is thrilled to be returning to the Capital Region. “It is really my home. I have a great deal of love for the Albany area,” he said. Wales described New York’s capital as “a great place for entrepreneurship, with access to tremendous research universities, a Small Business Development Center, tech meet-ups and other opportunities for networking.”

Wales holds a B.S. in information technology, an M.S. in industrial and management engineering, and a Ph.D. in management, all from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. His research focuses on corporate entrepreneurship, particularly identifying where organizations fall on the entrepreneurship continuum in terms of their innovativeness, risk taking and proactivity.

One concept Wales will bring to the School of Business is a hands-on class in entrepreneurship. He created and offered the course when he was a visiting professor of strategy and entrepreneurship at Skidmore College and continued it at JMU, where it is among the most popular electives. For his efforts related to the development of an experiential approach to entrepreneurship education, Wales was awarded JMU’s Kenneth Bartee Endowed Teaching Innovation Award in 2012.

His classroom approach, Wales explained, involves spending less time creating a business plan and more time doing. “Deeper, richer learning occurs when one is tasked with attempting to start and run a new business. Entrepreneurship is about problem solving. Entrepreneurs care about building new solutions to problems they encounter. They don’t want to be in a lecture hall. They are creators. They are competitive. They rise to a challenge,” added Wales, who will teach at both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

J. Spencer Standish, chairman emeritus at Albany International, and Patricia Standish, a retired college lecturer, are well known to Capital Region residents for their support of numerous educational and civic interests. Their gift combines with a SUNY 20/20 grant to create this professorship in entrepreneurship and two others.

Dozens of UAlbany faculty, emeriti faculty, staff and friends gathered May 15 to dedicate the University at Albany’s Emeritus Center in honor of William L. Reese, Ph.D., its founder. The center sponsors a variety of speakers and educational and cultural programs dedicated to what Reese calls its “three voices”: Research, Teaching and Service. The William L. Reese Emeritus Center, funded in part by The Professor Reese “Three Voices” Endowment, will continue to enhance its diverse offerings to UAlbany’s emeriti faculty.

Inaugural Massry Lecture a Rousing Success

More than 100 UAlbany supporters and students attended the inaugural Massry Lecture on March 12 in the Standish Living Room of the School of Business. Featured speaker Benjamin M. Lawsky, New York State’s Superintendent of Financial Services, addressed a number of his department’s key regulatory priorities. Made possible by the historic generosity of the Massry family, the lecture was the first in a series of activities seeking to enrich the academic experience for University at Albany students.

The Great Danes at Saratoga

The Great Danes graced Saratoga for two days of celebration, networking and horse racing.

More than 110 UAlbany donors attended the invitation-only reception, held July 30 at the Saratoga National Racing Museum and Hall of Fame. Guests had the opportunity to mingle, tour the facility, and hear from University at Albany Foundation Board President George R. Hearst III and UAlbany President Robert J. Jones.

The following day, 300-plus alumni and friends gathered for the Second Annual UAlbany Day at the Races. The event featured appearances and prizes provided by the partners at West Point Thoroughbreds; guest horse handicappers; and the team behind Embrace the Race, a Saratoga-born horse-racing apparel company.

Merci, Gracias, Arigato … Thanking UAlbany Donors

Photos: Mark Schmidt

While preparing for their finals May 7, UAlbany students took time to stop by the “Thank a Donor” area just outside the Campus Center and share personal messages of gratitude. By supporting scholarships, awards, lectures, nationally ranked programs and cutting-edge facilities, UAlbany donors make a difference both inside and outside the classroom. For a moving video summary of the day, visit www.albany.edu/giving and click on “featured video.”
After changing his major three times, Stephen Adly Guirgis finally discovered his passion, and an academic home, in the University at Albany’s theatre department. He credited theatre professors Langdon Brown and the late Jarka Burian and Al Asermely with inspiring him to pursue a career that culminated in the 2015 Pulitzer Prize for drama for his play Between Riverside and Crazy.

“Al was kind of like a shepherd of wayward souls, and he helped guide me through to graduation. Al’s playwriting class helped open my mind and made me think maybe I could write for the theater someday,” said Guirgis. He recalled Burian as “a great teacher who taught me to love the theater,” and he took Brown’s classes in Comic Theory, Shakespeare and Modern Drama. Brown also cast Guirgis his senior year in his first lead in a University play, Richard Greenberg’s Eastern Standard.

The son of an Egyptian immigrant, Guirgis grew up in Manhattan and had only vague objectives when he arrived at UAlbany. He struggled academically and felt adrift as he tried various majors before he found his niche in the tight-knit theatre program. “Things really started to click, at that point,” he recalled. “We were kind of like a weird group, but we were always doing something, creating shows, and we stuck together.”

Glenn Fleshler, B.A.’90, Guirgis’ roommate in off-campus apartments and fellow theatre major, went on to star in the TV series “True Detective” and “Hannibal” and has been cast in many feature films. Another Guirgis collaborator who attended UAlbany is John Ortiz, a founder, with the late actor Philip Seymour Hoffman, of the off-Broadway LAByrinth Theater Company.

When Guirgis visited UAlbany in 2010 for a seminar, lecture and student production of his play Jesus Hopped The A Train, Brown introduced his former student, praising Guirgis for his “amazing ability to hear dialogue and reproduce the rhythm and dialect.” Added Brown: “He’s a very empathetic person with a high intelligence quotient. He has a take on diversity and colorful characters that is unique and fresh.”

“His writing is electrifying,” said Donald Faulkner, director of the New York State Writers Institute. “We’re very proud of Stephen, who’s still legendary around here.”
Guirgis enjoyed returning to his alma mater. “I have a lot of good memories of UAlbany,” he said. “I’m really happy that I’m still friends with several people from the theatre program. We’re all just a lucky bunch of kids from UAlbany who were trying to find ourselves, and now we’re making a living in theater in New York.”

Guirgis is an actor and playwright who endured lean years while getting established in the New York theater world. He worked as a violence-prevention specialist and HIV-prevention educator in prisons, shelters and schools. He was recently hired as a writer for an upcoming Netflix TV show, “Get Down,” focused on the birth of hip-hop in the 1970s, is set in the South Bronx and directed by Baz Luhrmann.

The Pulitzer jury called Between Riverside and Crazy “a nuanced, beautifully written play about a retired police officer faced with eviction that uses dark comedy to confront questions of life and death.” Critics have hailed Guirgis as “a masterful poet of the downtrodden.”

Guirgis lives in the apartment where he grew up on the Upper West Side. His parents are deceased. “I wish my parents and my great friend Phil (Seymour Hoffman) could have lived to see me win the Pulitzer. I know they’d be incredibly proud,” he said.
Jon Gilroy is well on his way to attaining his “big dream”: a career as a motivational speaker.

The senior social-welfare major from Pleasant Valley, N.Y., visits secondary and elementary schools to talk with students. “I spoke at one school because a student there has cerebral palsy,” recalls Gilroy. “I have it, too.”

Gilroy, who spoke at Vanderbilt University in 2014, also shares his wisdom at UAlbany. “I talked with a family whose child, a first-semester freshman, was struggling with the transition to college. But they seemed comfortable afterward, and I felt good because I was helping someone else.”

As a Residential Life peer educator, Gilroy looks forward to doing more on campus. “I’m working with [ResLife staff] Ekow King and Mayra Raxon to develop programming surrounding the creation of dialogues on the issues of culture, race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, ability and religion. The dialogues will also cover basic issues of identity and learning to love, appreciate and embrace oneself.”

Gilroy, who uses a wheelchair, is pleased to have chosen UAlbany, where “I could live a relatively independent life.” He found the School of Social Welfare’s reputation and its “very competitive” academic offerings attractive, too. “The professors are great,” he adds; “they’ve all been very accessible to me. There are so many academic-support services here. My work in peer advisement exposes me to a lot of different outlets, too.”

Michael Carmen, who founded the Michael T. Carmen ’84 Mentoring Scholarship Gilroy has received since freshman year, has likewise been supportive. “I can call him and say: ‘Can you help me? I need to know how I’m going to tackle this,’” notes Gilroy.

Gilroy, who graduates in 2016, is weighing his post-UAlbany options. “I may enter the speaking circuit after completing master’s studies in a year,” he says, “or work three years in a supervised clinical setting, become clinically certified and start my own practice.”
social-media mavens

University at Albany alumni who work in corporate administration, public relations, advertising and marketing take to social media to spread the word about their companies, engage consumers and inspire brand loyalty.
Footwear legend Birkenstock “is not your typical company,” maintains David Kahan, the firm’s chief executive officer since 2013. “This is a company with heart and passion. Our mission is not just to sell footwear, but to sell footwear that brings people happiness and satisfaction.”

Kahan is responsible for “all elements of the business, including distribution; brand management; and, of course, delivering a profit to our shareholders.” He also relishes another role: connecting with Birkenstock’s customer base through social media.

For customers who prefer more traditional communication methods, Birkenstock maintains a call center. “In a day and age where it is nearly impossible to get a human being on the phone, we believe in personal engagement,” observes Kahan, adding that consumers also receive responses to email messages forwarded to the company’s general mailbox.

Thanks to its commitment to customers, Birkenstock has experienced “explosive growth over the past two years,” according to Kahan. The brand’s fans include actor Leonardo DiCaprio, Kate Hudson and recent Academy Award winner Julianne Moore. “Jillian has my cell-phone number and can reach out anytime to find out when the newest style is coming out. Her Twitter picture shows her feet in a pair of fur-lined Birkenstocks. This isn’t something you can fake. We do no celebrity seedings or product placement.”

Social media, Kahan adds, “have changed the way brands engage their consumers. We believe in wrapping our arms around our loyal fans and creating a true community. The direct contact shows respect for our customers; it lets them know they are valued.”

Birkenstock, founded by a family in Germany more than 240 years ago, is still made there, “largely by hand.” The brand came to the United States in the late 1960s when a California woman, Margot Fraser, discovered the comfortable shoes after developing foot pain while trekking through Europe. When Fraser returned to San Francisco, Kahan relates, “she contacted the Birkenstock family and, with zero footwear experience, asked if she could import some pairs. Managers at shoe stores told her the shoes were ugly and would never sell.”

Convinced of the shoes’ health benefits, however, Fraser sold the first pairs to health-food stores. “Birkenstocks caught on with a somewhat ‘alternative’ crowd that included college students and have since become a global phenomenon. Our styles are considered some of the most iconic footwear silhouettes in the industry,” Kahan observes.

Kahan himself is somewhat iconic. While majoring in accounting at UAlbany, he worked at Macy’s for a few summers. The experience melded his enthusiasm for sports, clothing and fashion with a penchant for assisting customers. After completing the retailer’s executive-training program, Kahan created The Macy’s Athletic Club, which capitalized on “the huge cultural interest in health and wellness, and marked Macy’s entry into the athletic-footwear business.”

Senior-management roles with Nike; Reebok, North America; and Adidas and its Rockport footwear division followed.

Birkenstock inspires customer loyalty because “we will never, ever compromise our quality or brand values,” explains Kahan. He can personally attest to the company’s unwavering commitment to workmanship and mission: Kahan wears Birkenstocks to work – with a business suit.

What’s Next for Birkenstock?

Birkenstock’s “fans for life,” says CEO David Kahan, have given the company opportunities to expand its product line.

“A closed-toe shoe collection introduced recently includes warm winter boots, women’s spring wedges, and also great men’s casual shoes.” Response to the line “has exceeded all expectations,” Kahan reports. “We also just launched hosiery. Many people wear them with the Birkenstocks – a look we call ‘socks ’n’ stocks.’”

Kahan promises that Birkenstock “will continue to introduce what we call ‘limited-edition’ styles that deliver seasonally and excite the market. Spring 2016 will include neon colors.”
Michele Husak intended to major in business at UAlbany, “but statistics wasn’t my cup of tea.” She enjoyed her psychology classes more. “I always loved trying to figure people out on a deeper level,” recalls the movie and TV lover, who relocated to Los Angeles two weeks after graduation to work in the entertainment industry.

After five years assisting agents; reading scripts; and serving as a development executive for various production companies at Warner Bros., Columbia/TriStar and Sony Pictures, Husak moved back to New York to do band publicity at record labels. At the advent of the late 1990s dot-com boom, she began a career in tech public relations at Jupiter Communications. The communication skills Husak had honed at UAlbany – and the “invaluable” public-speaking proficiency her former professors had encouraged by pushing her to participate more in class – were useful as she aided companies in “refining and telling their stories on a broad scale.”

She returned to California to take a role with Shopping.com (later acquired by eBay) in 2003. Later, as one of Pandora’s first employees, Husak helped the start-up evolve into a “very popular” music service. She subsequently worked in PR at Digg, then in corporate communications for the online video network Revision3, which Discovery acquired in 2012. Husak went on to head communications for Thumbtack, “a marketplace that matches customers seeking service professionals to assist with everything from home repairs to party planning and music lessons.”

Husak’s UAlbany degree enabled her to “manage the unique personalities of my bosses, and of the producers, actors and writers, and musicians” early in her career, and those of the Silicon Valley executives she works with now. “The entertainment-business craziness you see and hear about is not an exaggeration,” she says, adding, “the same applies to the Silicon Valley!”

A self-described “behind-the-scenes type,” Husak is “happy promoting others.” Since she began her career, “social media has absolutely transformed the public relations industry,” notes Husak, who embraces Twitter, Facebook and the company blog posts that have superseded Rolodexes, newswire services and press releases.
“Communicating directly with customers is a great opportunity to form a trusting relationship, and it shouldn’t be taken for granted. Consumers now look for a response in real time and in an authentic manner; the younger generation wants to connect and converse. The companies excelling at social media are the ones that are super fast, super helpful and super smart about conversing with, not at, their customers,” explains Husak.

Recently, she took on a new role, running communications at Indiegogo, the global site that helps bring people’s ideas to fruition through crowdfunding. In her spare time, Husak also does PR and social media for husband George Yatrakis’ new venture. “He creates handmade wooden surfboards (www.facebook.com/pacificaboards), and it’s been great fun attempting to build a following from scratch,” Husak recounts. “It’s a challenge to know what to post and when, and how to speak in the language of potential customers. Each new ‘like’ or comment is a personal victory!”

Husak, a mom of two, is a Girl Scout troop leader and started an adventure club for boys and their dads three years ago. She is also active with the parent-teacher organization at her children’s school. Husak and her family live in Pacifica, Calif., where they hike and enjoy the beach, camping, concerts, and “being outside as much as possible.”

Advice for Social-Media Users

“Social-media managers and PR professionals need to be transparent and honest in how they communicate,” observes veteran public-relations expert Michele Husak. “It’s never a good idea to respond only to positive messages or to delete negative comments. Don’t be afraid to put yourself out there — humility goes a long way. If you treat your customers with respect, it will pay dividends.

“Remember, when you reply to a comment, you’re not just responding to one person: Your entire customer base will see how you handle the situation, so make sure you get it right. And if you don’t, apologize and fix it.”

You wouldn’t expect a former English major to say that analyzing literature in college helped him interpret important trends in social networks and understand why people use Facebook and other social media.

Well, then, meet Patrick Albano, who says one of the most influential teachers he had at UAlbany was Professor of English Jeff Berman. In one class, Berman — whose specialties include literature and psychology — taught Albano how to define clearly and concisely what it was he was trying to say.

That skill comes in handy today in Albano’s role as vice president, head of Advertising Solutions for Yahoo! in Europe, the Middle East and Africa. In this position, and for most of his 17-year career, Albano has looked at how advertising is evolving because of social networks.

One of the most important new trends in social media, Albano says, is “native advertising,” in which companies mirror ordinary users in how they present their content. Albano is currently focusing on Tumblr, the social-networking website acquired by Yahoo! in 2013. He also served as co-chair of an industry-wide task force trying to define guidelines for this new type of advertising.

Albano, who previously was vice president of Sales at Citizen Sports, says that businesses are not only using social networks to promote their services, but they can actually build their entire business on social networks like Tumblr or Facebook. That’s just what Citizen Sports did, and under Albano’s direction, Yahoo! acquired the company in 2010. “That’s the next evolution of social marketing.”
Sports perfectly illustrate the symbiosis between social media and live events. That fact isn’t lost on Ron Wechsler, senior vice president for Original Programming and Production at NBC Sports: He says he contemplates the role social media play in his industry on a daily basis.

“Anything that comes up, I want to make sure, at the very least, I have an understanding of how it is being consumed,” he said. As a result, Wechsler has adopted social-media platforms not necessarily targeted to his demographic.

“A 45-year-old guy on Snapchat isn’t the norm,” he quipped. Still, it’s an especially good example of the platform he seeks, observed Wechsler, who earned a B.A. in English with a minor in rhetoric and communication at UAlbany. While the perception of Snapchat was an app for tweens and teens, it’s quickly become a much bigger player in the game – one that broadcasters and networks are rushing to embrace.

“Sometimes, you’re chasing very ephemeral platforms,” he said. “And sometimes, if you’re not paying attention, what seems insignificant can become incredibly significant almost overnight.”

While live events are the bread and butter of sports networks, Wechsler knows there’s a role for social media in helping to promote the types of original programming – documentaries, reality series, etc. – he oversees. Compelling, humorous, “OMG!” or cliché “viral” posts can all be inclinations to tune in. “Those are the sorts of things anybody in the content business tries to tap into, whether you’re NBC or BuzzFeed,” he said.

Though social media hasn’t altered the core responsibility of putting out a quality televised product, Wechsler said it has made tapping into the zeitgeist much easier. “The world is your focus group. Pay attention; figure out what people are talking about,” he noted. “You have access to what they’re enjoying, or not enjoying, in a real timeline. That is an incredible tool.”
When Andrew Pudalov founded Rush Bowls in The Hill district of Boulder in 2004, he was able to rely on the oldest form of social media: word of mouth. His eatery, which serves thickly blended fruit bowls with a customer’s choice of toppings, turned out to be a hit among the University of Colorado crowd.

“It’s a great way to start. Either the students accept you and become loyal customers, or they don’t. We’re a premium-priced product, so their acceptance is important,” said Pudalov, who majored in business administration at UAlbany.

Eleven years later, the landscape of social media only amplifies that word of mouth. It also allows Rush Bowls to participate in the conversation directly. Social media “is about engaging [customers], asking them questions, trying to get information from them on what they like and what they want to see,” Pudalov said. One example: Customers very much appreciate it when Rush Bowls teams up with a student group to donate a portion of sales to charity. Good will and customer rapport are important to Pudalov, especially since the Rush Bowls brand has expanded into wholesale distribution – and beginning this year, franchises – throughout the Rocky Mountains region. But the continual shifts in social media require constant attention and input, from his managers down to his younger employees.

Pudalov picks the brains of his teenaged kids, too. “Things have changed,” he observed. “Today, 14- and 16-year-olds, rather than 50- and 60-year-olds, are dictating where they see social media going.”
Norman E. Snyder, Jr., B.S.’83
Connecting With Consumers
By Claudia Ricci, Ph.D.’96

Back in the late 1990s, Norman Snyder was leading the South Beach Beverage Company and promoting its highly successful “SoBe” beverages. The company initially relied on guerilla marketing, followed by traditional mass-marketing campaigns, to drive consumer awareness.

Twenty years later, as president and CEO of Avitae, USA, Snyder promotes beverages under the Avitae brand. But now, thanks to social media, marketing has taken on a dramatically new approach. Like so many other companies, Avitae wants “to interact directly with consumers,” Snyder says. “All of our advertising is built on social media, including Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and Pinster.”

Recently, Avitae – which sells a line of caffeinated water without sugar – announced new flavors on its webpage, and placed pictures and descriptions of the products throughout social-media outlets. Particularly important to the campaign was Facebook, where Avitae purchased digital ad space to promote the new drinks to a broader audience. Instagram, a photo-based medium, was also key.

Social media, Snyder says, are “extremely cost effective.” He estimates that social-media advertising costs only about 25 percent as much as an old-fashioned ad campaign.

Not only are social media cheaper, they’re also faster: “You can decide one day to run a campaign, and that afternoon it’s going out.” With social media, Snyder observes, “you connect faster than you would otherwise, and you get feedback faster, with a lot more specifics.”
Great value.
Excellent customer service.
Lifetime warranty.

This is the formula that Eric Tong and his business partner have parlayed into a nearly overnight success story. Following what he termed “a mid-life crisis” after nearly two decades in the consumer electronics industry, Tong decided to strike out on his own ... and co-founded Tech Armor in June of 2012. Tech Armor manufactures screen protectors, cases, cables, and mobile charging solutions for smartphones, tablets, and other devices.

They sold only 89 units in their first month, but they moved more than 300,000 in their first six months. By the end of 2014, they had sold 6 million screen protectors.

More remarkably, Tech Armor achieved this growth without any retail displays in “brick-and-mortar” stores, and with no traditional marketing support. Their product is sold exclusively online, primarily through amazon.com, www.techarmor.com, and Ebay, and their promotion is largely a combination of social media, public relations and paid search (Amazon and Google). In online selling environments like Amazon, a product’s success hinges upon its user-generated reviews. Based on its many four- and five-star ratings and some 10,000+ reviews, Tech Armor’s products are held in high regard.

“We stand behind our product, and people appreciate that,” said Tong.

On the rare occasions that someone posts a negative comment about the product, Tong’s customer-service team responds promptly – reaching out to dissatisfied customers, and often sending them a free replacement product.

“You have to be nimble in our business,” explained Tong. “Word of mouth is everything.”

Tong remembers his UAlbany days fondly – especially the accessible, approachable faculty. “I feel like every single teacher was there to help,” he noted.
Adam Denenberg, B.S.’98
Tuned In
By Carol Olechowski

As chief technology officer of the iHeartRadio network, music fan and computer-science wiz Adam Denenberg has a job well suited to his passions.

The position “was definitely appealing,” says Denenberg, who joined iHeartRadio in November 2014 after serving as vice president of Engineering with The Huffington Post. “Working for a company with the range that iHeartRadio has was a tremendous opportunity for me.”

At iHeartRadio, iHeartMedia’s all-in-one digital-radio and streaming-music service, Denenberg is responsible for overall technology strategy. Recruiting is another aspect of his work: When meeting with prospective employees, “I talk about iHeartRadio’s culture of innovation, and why it’s so interesting and fun to work here,” Denenberg notes.

iHeartRadio’s 858 U.S.-based AM, FM and HD outlets broadcast news, talk, music, sports and a variety of other formats through iHeartRadio.com, its apps and individual stations’ websites. Each month, millions of listeners use their tablets, smartphones and gaming consoles to access its information and entertainment offerings.

“The reach of radio remains extremely strong, with 92 percent of Americans listening each week,” observes Denenberg, whose work experience also includes positions with Thomson Reuters, ROO Media, About.com and Comedy Central.

Since people tune in at their homes and offices, in cars, and on public transportation, he mines “data around listening and playing behaviors” to personalize their user experiences by determining what types of music they enjoy, and when. “By understanding the way people use our products – based on geographic locations, previous listening behaviors and time of day – we can make more informed decisions about whether they’re interested in Ben Harper, Drake or Pink Floyd.”

Denenberg, who majored in computer science and minored in physics, entered the technology field right after graduating from UAlbany. He praises professors S.S. Ravi and Seth Chaiken for teaching courses that provided students a “solid foundation” and afforded them the “flexibility” they would need whether their careers took them into robotics, artificial intelligence or in another direction.
“It’s no longer effective to talk at your audience,” explained Rob Stone. “You have to become part of the conversation – part of the culture.”

Stone is the founder and co-CEO of Cornerstone, a marketing agency that exists at the intersection of music, marketing and pop culture. Cornerstone has developed experiential marketing efforts for some of the world’s biggest brands (including Nike, Converse and Coca-Cola) by connecting them in a relevant way with major music artists, including Kanye West; actors like Aaron Paul; and movies and TV shows such as “Entourage.” Launched in 1996, Cornerstone is now staffed by more than 100 people – with offices across three continents.

Cornerstone’s campaigns include traditional media, like outdoor and print, but they also leverage the viral power of video; social media; and live, culture-shaping events, such as the annual SXSW festival.

“People value the opinions and recommendations of their friends and peers over the clutter of messages being broadcast at them – that’s why social media and word of mouth are so important,” said Stone. “But you have to create something special and entertaining that people will genuinely want to interact with and share.”

Before founding Cornerstone, Stone began his career in the music business, working with legendary producer Clive Davis and such artists as Sean “Puffy” Combs and Notorious B.I.G. His love for music extends beyond Cornerstone: He is also co-founder of The FADER, a magazine that spotlights emerging artists. With a strong eye for talent, The FADER has provided the first-ever cover stories for Pharrell Williams, Nicki Minaj, The White Stripes and others.

Stone takes great joy in co-running both businesses, and said his instincts date back to his UAlbany days and beyond.

“At age 8, I sent my dad a list of candy and soda that I wanted him to bring to my sleep-away camp, because I knew I could resell them for a profit,” said Stone. “While at UAlbany, I started the first-ever Young Comedians night at LP’s [a now defunct Albany bar], and I created an advertising calendar with local merchants like Sovrana Pizza and other Albany vendors. I’ve always been entrepreneurial.”
Rachel Galatt, B.A.’94

When Rachel Galatt launched Maternal Science, Inc., and the healthy mama® brand in 2013, her business plan called for the company’s product line to be on shelves in Target, Walmart and CVS by 2016.

“We are a year ahead of my business plan,” says a delighted Galatt, who majored in Spanish and minored in business at UAlbany. “We are very blessed.”

One reason the company has been so successful so quickly is that it is filling a niche, supplying the safest over-the-counter drugs to treat the common symptoms of pregnancy. Each product is thoroughly researched and guaranteed to contain the safest active ingredients for pregnant women.

Another reason healthy mama® is growing like wildfire is because of the marketing. While its products are marketed through more traditional media outlets, the company is busy developing marketing initiatives for social media, as well.

Currently, healthy mama® has a website (healthymamabrand.com), a Facebook page; a blog; and accounts with Pinterest, Instagram, Twitter and YouTube. The company works with an ad agency to design print and digital advertisements for Facebook. In addition, healthy mama® is in the process of hiring an agency that will be devoted specifically to promoting its products through social media.

“I believe in social media,” says Galatt. But she admits she’s “challenged” when it comes to navigating the social-media networks; they are “so fluid and constantly evolving.” For that reason, Galatt wants to make sure that she hires a very savvy and experienced agency.
It’s one thing to jump onto the content-marketing bandwagon to tell brand stories. It’s another to have driven the wagon all along. That’s what Stephen Loguidice and his colleagues at BuzzFeed have done since 2010, when they pioneered a new way for advertisers to get in front of the public.

Loguidice remembers: “We were the ones saying that everybody needs to start thinking differently, because consumption habits have changed drastically: Social [media] is the new starting point, and companies need to be looking this way. We were shouting it from the mountaintops.”

In 2010, digital marketing equated to obnoxious banners, interstitial ads and video pre-roll. As the first salesperson brought on board to help monetize BuzzFeed, Loguidice was at the forefront of helping brands create content people would find compelling, humorous or interesting enough to share on social-media platforms like Facebook and Twitter. “People were throwing around the word ‘content,’ but there was no context behind it. We were the only ones doing it,” says Loguidice, who earned his B.A. in economics with a minor in business administration. He now serves as BuzzFeed’s vice president of Brand Strategy for the East Coast.

One early client was Comedy Central, for “Tosh.0,” which – as a TV show centered around Web content – was a perfect fit for BuzzFeed. Another client was General Electric, with its “Ecomagination” campaign. As an innovative company with “a very strong message” about its identity, Loguidice observes, GE “wasn’t trying to sell anything right then and there.”

As BuzzFeed expands into emerging social-media outlets like Pinterest and Snapchat, and into producing its own online video programming and, potentially, feature-length films, the central philosophy of good content marketing still applies, Loguidice says. “The core foundation is: How do I make something for people, make it for social [media], and build it to be spread and consumed on these platforms that people are already using?”
“Back at SUNY Albany, when I first showed up for classes in 1988, it was a completely different world,” recalls award-winning freelance photojournalist Teru Kuwayama. “Most students didn’t have computers of any kind, and smartphones were more than a decade off.

“I remember one course in which the professor explained that there was a new electronic system by which homework assignments would be shared with the class. It required students to go to the library, where there were some desktop computers, in order to register for something called ‘email.’ I thought this was such an absurd and pointless waste of time that I immediately dropped the class. I guess that professor was less delusional than I thought,” observes Kuwayama, who majored in art at the University and began his career taking pictures for the yearbook and University Photo Service.

“I PROVIDE A PHOTOGRAPHER’S PERSPECTIVE FOR A PLATFORM THAT HAS HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF PEOPLE MAKING AND SHARING PHOTOGRAPHS.”
As a member of the Instagram Community Team (“community” is tech-world terminology for ‘people,” he explains), the New York City-based Kuwayama fills a unique role: “I provide a photographer’s perspective for a platform that has hundreds of millions of people making and sharing photographs.”

For more than 20 years, Kuwayama worked as a photojournalist for news magazines and aid organizations, “primarily in places like Afghanistan, Pakistan, Kashmir and Iraq.” Often embedded with military forces that ranged from “the U.S. Marines and Special Operations Forces to Indian, Pakistani and Afghan forces,” he captured images of battle and survival. Technology Entertainment and Design (TED), The Knight Foundation, and the Dart Center for Journalism and Trauma at Columbia University are among the many organizations that have recognized Kuwayama for his work.

“In the early days of the Iraq conflict,” Kuwayama says, “I worked with my younger brother, Shinji, who’s a lot more tech savvy than I am. We launched a social network for photographers and people we called ‘unconventional travelers,’ like NGO folks, fixers, and translators, and the odd characters that you meet in off-the-grid places. It was called Lightstalkers, and it ran for a decade. Shinji went on to work at a then-tiny tech start-up called Groupon, becoming its director of Engineering and overseeing its expansion across the planet.”

The technologies that have combined to create what Kuwayama calls “the social-media age” are readily accessible and easy to use, but he cautions that there is “the double-edged sword,” as well. “We’re all swimming in an ocean of images and information. That’s one of the challenges I work on at Instagram these days – the question of how we find the most important images in the millions uploaded every day.”
For Keith Garber and lifelong friend Kevin Schwartz, the entrepreneurial “lightbulb moment” came in 2004. “Kevin and his wife were thinking about starting a family,” recalls Garber. “They wanted their baby to be safe, but also free to play, crawl and explore, as babies should. They started searching for products that would make their home, and the planet, safe, but couldn’t find them.”

That’s when the idea for Babyganics – the Westbury, N.Y., maker of “household and personal-care products made with plant-based ingredients and designed to help parents create a baby-safe world” – was born. The company, “run by two dads,” has developed “a whole ecosystem of products, from home care to skin care, from the bath to laundry to sun care,” according to Garber.

As an undergraduate biology major at UAlbany, Garber was planning a career in medicine. “My love for biology and physiology was overtaken by my entrepreneurial spirit, and I completed a minor in business administration. The reality is, I had already begun my entrepreneurial career sophomore year, with classmate and best friend Josh Shaw [B.S.’97], as a founding partner of Student Advantage. By the time we were 24, we had built a six-person organization into a 650-person publicly traded company on the NASDAQ, generating more than $100 million in sales,” Garber notes.

While he went on to initiate other successful start-ups, “I didn’t feel I was making a real difference in the lives of others – a dream of mine since I was a kid. When I teamed up with Kevin, I was finally able to combine my passion for growing a business, being a dad, and ultimately providing millions of parents access to baby-safe products.”

Garber and Schwartz “keep a simple goal for the company: to continue making baby products that use the safest ingredients available, are attainable for every mom and dad, and work insanely well!” The business “is so much fun!” adds Garber, who has three children – Zachary, 9; Skylar, 6; and Ashton, 2 – with wife Nicole. “Our wives and kids are test subjects for new formulas and packaging, and as our families grow, we uncover new parenting scenarios that require new products and solutions. Knowing that new parents discover our products every day, joining our journey to make their babies free to explore safely and freely so they can thrive, only reinforces the passion that drives us every day to continue bringing the Babyganics ‘baby-safe world’ mission to life.”

With the exception of diapers, all Babyganics products are manufactured in the United States, “underscoring our baby-safe promise by maintaining the highest safety and quality standards and expectations. We answer to mom (and dad) at the end of the day and take the trust they place in us very seriously. And, with our company’s tremendous growth, it’s nice to know that we are creating more jobs and opportunities throughout the U.S.,” Garber observes.

Babyganics products are sold by leading national retailers and online. Distributors include Babies ‘R’ Us, Toys ‘R’ Us, BuyBuyBaby, Diapers.com, Amazon.com, Target, Walgreens, CVS, Publix, Safeway, Kroger, and Wegmans.

Given its ambitious merchandising strategy, “Babyganics is fortunate to have some of the best online talent working within our business-development and marketing departments and at our agency partners,” says Garber. “With their expertise, Babyganics is very well positioned in the online world to engage with parents and parents-to-be and help to educate them on what they need to know when it comes to doing better for their families.”

ADVICE FOR ENTREPRENEURS

Babyganics co-founder Keith Garber advises aspiring entrepreneurs from UAlbany to “network with students from other schools to cross-pollinate and bring different business perspectives and approaches to life when building a business.” He speaks from experience: Garber and business partner Kevin Schwartz, a University at Buffalo graduate, “complement each other very well in business, and our combination has delivered a $1 + 1 = 11$ equation in day-to-day business.”
Vincent Gillen and Margaret will celebrate their 73rd wedding anniversary in November.

Class notes councilor: Vincent P. Gillen, vpgillen@yahoo.com

Eleanor Rothe Hammond recently celebrated her 93rd birthday. She lives in Round Rock, Texas.

Sheila Van Scoy Dingley’s husband, Albert F. Dingley Jr., passed in August 2014. Sheila now lives in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., and sends her love to her Phi Delta sisters.

Clara Beninati’s husband, Albert Beninati ’49, passed away in May 2015. Joan Sittner Sherwood attended her granddaughter’s wedding in Santa Paula, Calif. Joan keeps busy as a volunteer at the REACH Interpretive Center and the library, and enjoys going to the opera, visiting the beach and spending time with her third granddaughter. She lives in Richland, Wash.

Ruth Seelbach Elmore and husband Jim recently celebrated his 90th birthday at John Knox Village, Lee’s Summit, Mo. Ruth’s granddaughter has been nominated for an Emmy award.

Rosemary Ryan McGraw of Voorheesville, N.Y., welcomed a great-grandchild. She enjoys spending time with her eight grandchildren and now, four great-grandchildren.

Elsa Moberg Cox reports that one granddaughter is attending California Polytechnic Institute; another granddaughter, who graduated from UCLA, is attending Pepperdine University Law School. Her grandson will be a freshman at Arizona State University. Elsa maintains her strength by attending exercise classes regularly, Monday through Thursday.

Jerry Dunn and wife Shirley celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary in June; they met at NYSCT and were married one week after Shirley’s graduation. They attended several of their grandchildren’s high-school and college graduation ceremonies this past spring. Their grandchildren attend various universities, including Clark University, Cornell, the University of Virginia, SUNY Binghamton, SUNY (IT) Utica, Eckerd (Florida), and George Mason University. As they see how costly their grandchildren’s education is, Jerry and Shirley continue to be thankful they attended college in a different era and graduated with no debt. Jerry has served as secretary/treasurer of a golf group for several years, but plays golf less often. Instead, he has taken an interest in gardening and has a spot in a nearby community garden. Shirley continues to write books; her latest is on the history of Fort Crailo, a state historic site in Rensselaer. She has written a half-dozen others and is a recognized scholar on the Mohican Indians.

Three of Ellen Fay Harmon’s grandchildren graduated this past spring, including a grandson who received a master’s degree in culinary arts from Johnson & Wales University and will work as a sous chef at the Sagamore in Lake George. A granddaughter received her bachelor’s degree from Clarkson University, and Ellen’s youngest grandson will attend George Mason University in the fall. Ellen’s other grandchildren and family members are doing great things, as well. One granddaughter will travel to South Africa as an instructor in the student-exchange festivals; he lives in Tucson, Ariz.

Lena Soricelli Capuano’s oldest son recently retired from teaching at Truman State University and will be living with her for the next six months. He’ll return to his home in Kirkville, Mo., to spend the holidays with his children. Lena’s other son, a real-estate agent, lives in Newtown, Conn. Lena feels fortunate to have some of her family close by: She also has a son who lives across the street from her home in Altamont and teaches biology and environmental studies at Hudson Valley Community College. Elsa Moberg Cox reports that one granddaughter is attending California Polytechnic Institute; another granddaughter, who graduated from UCLA, is attending Pepperdine University Law School. program, and another grandson will be transferring from Syracuse University to Clarkson. Ellen’s two oldest grandsons are Virginia Commonwealth University graduates who live and work in Richmond, Va. Two of Bob Kittredge’s granddaughters were recently married; Bob and Diana now have two great-grandchildren as a result of one of the marriages. Unfortunately, Diana fell and broke her left femur, necessitating a complete hip replacement. She underwent rehab at the continuing-care facility where Bob and Diana recently moved. “Mickey” Seaman Rozwod plans to attend her high school’s 70th reunion. All six of her children, with their spouses and grandchildren, visited Mickey for Memorial Day weekend. Two of her boys live on the West Coast.

Joyce Zanchelli ’52 and Joe Zanchelli visited Mickey last year, and they enjoyed spending time with her grandchildren. “Mickey” and Diana recently moved. “Mickey” Seaman Rozwod plans to attend her high school’s 70th reunion. All six of her children, with their spouses and grandchildren, visited Mickey for Memorial Day weekend. Two of her boys live on the West Coast.

One granddaughter graduated from the physician’s-assistant program at Clarkson University, and another received her degree from the University at Buffalo. Mickey says, “That makes six grandkids through undergrad school, with four more to go.” Ursula Neuhaus Schiff was “promoted” to the assisted-living facility in Sarasota, Fla., in the retirement community in which her late husband and late dog had lived. Classes provided by outside teachers keep Ursula’s mind challenged, she says. Her two sons and all five of her grandchildren live in California. Gloria Maiselten Herkowitz is very proud to report that one grandson graduated from Jefferson Medical College and will be specializing in radiology, and another grandson is a student at Columbia Law School. Joe Zanchelli and Joyce Zanchelli ’52 celebrated their 64 years of marriage in June. They recently enjoyed a Road Scholar program in St. Augustine, Fla., and attended their granddaughter’s high-school graduation. Nicole, the youngest of eight grandchildren, will be attending Drexel University.

50 Irwin Baumel and Elise DeSeve traveled to Europe this past summer. They spent time in Budapest and Amsterdam and visited the Van Gogh Museum. Ken George, who had a knee replacement, is doing well and back to playing tennis. His youngest grandson graduated with a master’s degree in business and works at Price-WaterhouseCoopers in New York City. Ben Jackson sends best wishes to members of the Class of 1950. “I have memories of those long-ago years. I can’t believe it’s been 65 years, even though I was a math major and can certainly do the math.” Audrey Koch Feathers’ granddaughter, Gretchen, is the online marketing manager of Chelsea Green Publishing in Vermont, and is an aspiring Adirondack 46er following in the footsteps of her grandfather, Dick Feathers. Her Uncle Rich and Uncle Bob Feathers are Adirondack 46ers, as well. Lila Lee Silva Harrington spent three weeks in Scottsdale, Ariz., with her daughter Leslie and family. The trip included a visit to Sedona. Lila joined Leslie and her husband for lunch at the Enchanted Resort. Earlier, they participated in a two-day conference on global issues, a gathering of international dignitaries. They enjoyed visiting the Desert Botanical Gardens in Scottsdale. Lila is in good health, is still driving, and plans to visit Ozonea, Vermont, North Carolina and the coast. She spoke with Jeanne Bowen Walsh-Gardner on her birthday. Lila sends warm thoughts to 1950 classmates and Phi Delta sisters. Marjory Lyons celebrated the birth of her second great-granddaughter, Quinn, as well as her own (85th) birthday, in Cavendish, VT., where her family once had a small, historic inn. In an English accent learned as a student of Agnes Futterer, Marj read excerpts from one of her plays, much to the amusement of those gathered for the occasion. She retired from Nova Southeastern University after 22 years on the graduate faculty. At a recent lunch with University Associate Vice President Lori Matt-Murphy, Marj was presented a framed replica of a UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36, UAlbany magazine column she wrote about Helen Jones Warner, B.A.'36. Albert Martin provided a testimony to the life of his wife and our classmate, Shirley Warner Martin. Shirley was a math teacher, superintendent of the Sunday school, a member of the Board of Directors of the Girl Scout Council of Erie County, founding member of the Bowmansville Very Little Theater, past president of the Lancaster Historical Society, and an avid traveler. Malcolm Slakter spoke of the many advantages of living in Hawaii but noted that flying to the mainland to visit family is not one of them, especially since 9/11. Each year, in times past, he and Nancy would visit family. But with age and health now factors, Malcolm and Nancy’s flying days are over, so family members visit them in Hawaii. Their younger son and two of his children visited in June. Malcolm and Nancy try to appreciate each day in paradise and report that life is good. Harold Sparky Vaughn’s granddaughter, Olivia Hern, who recently completed her first year at Carnegie Mellon, spent part of the summer with the National Theater for Young Artists in New York and in Prague. While meeting in New York with two anti-human trafficking organizations, Sparky visited daughter Karen and granddaughter Christine. There will be a family reunion in Shelburne, VT., on the occasion of grandson Christopher’s wedding. Sparky is working with a group of Rotarians in Washington, D.C., and Bangkok, Thailand, to address human-trafficking and child-slavery issues. Class notes councilor: Harold Vaughn, vaughnha@aol.com

52 A note from your class councilor: I am saddened to report the passing of our classmate Don Puttermann. Don was a leader of our class for many years. Marilyn Johnson VanDyke remains closely involved with the Warren County Historical Society. She celebrated her daughter’s wedding in June, and now has two great sons-in-law. Her grandson manages doms at The College of Saint Rose, and her granddaughter has transferred to UAlbany. Jean Faville Smith and husband Smitty enjoyed a cruise from Fort Lauderdale to Puerto Rico, St. Thomas and St. Croix this past spring. They are planning a trip to Burlington, VT., in September. Madeline Weitoft Huchro was diagnosed with Walanstrom macroglobulinemia a year ago and underwent chemotherapy treatments, but she is doing well. She plans to spend six months in Westport and six months in Florida. Her daughter is retiring after teaching and coaching for 34 years; her son has been a national sales representative for PepsiCo since 1985. Her two granddaughters have launched careers in physical education and massage therapy. Jeanne Seymour Earle survived an aorta valve replacement and three bypasses with flying colors. She’s still working at the library and enjoys attending Broadway shows with friends. Vickie Eade Eddy will be attending her grandson Jeffrey’s wedding in Seattle. She notes, “It is nice being in touch with my 12 grandchildren’s lives, as some are living in other states, and just three live in my hometown of Olean, N.Y.” Ginny Maurer Tracey updated her mailing address to Rexford, N.Y., which is still in Clifton Park (contact your class councilor for details.) Bert Jablon and his wife enjoyed a Road Scholar program in Toronto. Nancy Frey Pettinelli’s grandchildren are performing very well in their respective sports. Her oldest grandson finished his first year at Stevenson University, where he played on the lacrosse team. His brother, a junior in high school, plays both basketball and lacrosse; he was named to the First Team Missouri All Stars. Nancy’s youngest grandson lives in Pennsylvania and participates in many sports, including lacrosse. Her four granddaughters are also doing well, with interests in art and athletics. Nancy says she’s “trying to empty her house, but it’s not easy.” Tom Holman is still enjoying the benefits of living on Long Island and in St. Maarten. St. Maarten now has a first-class air terminal; Tom invites classmates to stay at “his hotel,” Hotel Pasanggraham. Jane Minckler Jennings attended her granddaughter’s wedding at the Trump Winery and saw the beautiful home her granddaughter recently purchased. Her granddaughter, who recently earned a master’s degree from the University of Virginia, is an engineer for Army Intelligence. Kitty Kloser Irons and husband Marty suffered long-term bronchitis throughout the winter, hindering their usual travel plans. They’ve fully recovered and are back to their busy schedules. Kitty’s granddaughter Megan is in Senegal and has learned the Wolof language. Her other granddaughter, Erin, is working on a summer internship at St. Michael’s College admissions office. Margaret Jackson Moschak recently wrote Different Drummers, a book filled with anecdotes of the problems people run into when they live and work together. It is available on Amazon. Bill Wiley is in his sixth year of remission for lymphoma. His wife, Jane, had a spinal fusion in June. They have moved into a continuing-care facility on Hilton Head Island, which Jane says is “like going to senior camp.” Their family is spread throughout the country; one granddaughter is studying electrical engineering at the University of Arizona, and her sister will begin law school at the University of California, Berkeley. Another granddaughter will be a junior in high school. Bill’s teenage grandkids are in private school in Marietta, Ga. Joyce Leavitt Zanchelli and Joe Zanchelli ’49 attended Road Scholar programs in Warwick, N.Y., and St. Augustine, Fla. They’ve had some health issues but are doing well and have busy schedules once again. They celebrated their youngest grandchild’s graduation in June. Al Stevenson has recovered well from his serious illness and has returned to teaching. He will be traveling to upstate New York for his grand-niece’s wedding. Each year, the Class of 1952 bestows a scholarship on a UAlbany junior or senior, in honor of distinguished teaching faculty from NYSCT classes of 1948-1952. This year’s award honors modern languages faculty: Frank G. Carino, J. Wesley Childress, Edwin C. Munro and Arlene F. Preseon. It was presented to Teresa Peralta ’15 by Joan Barron, Class of 1952 co-councilor.

Irene Brezinsky McDonald remembers working on the State College News, which was printed and proofread in Hudson. Irene’s edition featured a banner headline, “Sorority-Frat Ball.” Irene recalls: “I looked at the final copy, and had a shock. ‘Frat’ was misspelled. The printers told me that college kids couldn’t proofread and that all the papers had been printed and if I wanted to change the spelling, I’d have to pay. Of course, they’d made one bad copy to scare me and have a little bawdy joke.” Irene learned a wonderful lesson about proofreading and often shared this story with her students. Irene continues her career as a reporter and writes a column, “Reading and Renewal,” for her Catholic diocesan paper. Herb Thier was recognized in a recent National Science Foundation article. He is highly regarded in his field, as noted in “Reflections from Science Education Pioneer Herb Thier on the Value of Inquiry-Based Learning.” The article can be read in its entirety at http://www.nsf.gov. Howie Fenenbock plays poker and bridge regularly. If your class councilor remembers correctly, Howie liked to play cards in the Commons. Doug Nielsen enjoys his role as a grandparent. “Our granddaughter, Kara, has presented us with a second great-granddaughter, Naomi, born in March. It’s fun to visit and hold her, and her older sister, Hannah, enjoys her little sister.” Two of Doug’s granddaughters graduated from college: Megan, from Oklahoma University with dual degrees in international relations, and Megan’s younger sister, Jonna, from Cornell with a bachelor’s degree in human relations. Jonna works in New York City. Jordine Skoff Von Wantoch met her daughter in London for a few shows, then traveled to Dubai. Jordine is now co-chair of a committee, with actor Robert Foxworth, to increase estate gifts to The Old Globe Theatre in San Diego. She traveled to Hartford this past spring for the opening of Kiss Me Kate, directed by Darko Tresnjak. A tribute to Jordine is included on the Military Service Wall at UAlbany. It describes her career in the Navy, including her contributions to revised policies allowing women to combine motherhood with a naval career. Bob Blitgood ’54 remembers his first wife, Marie De Seve, who died from complications of childbirth at age 25. Marie was a cheerful, active member of our class. Milan Krchniak, Bob Giammatteo, Claude Palczak and Paul Ward attended the spring Potter Club luncheon. Marie Hoffman continues to be involved in local events and has been meeting with several high-school friends on a regular basis following her 50th high school reunion. Her son has written two computer books, one of which has been adopted as a college textbook. Bob Hughes and Rosie Keller Hughes have celebrated several special occasions with their grandchildren. One granddaughter received a master’s degree in art therapy, with honor, from Pratt Institute, and the other granddaughter was recently married. One grandson graduated from high school and will attend SUNY Geneseo; his brother turned 16 and will be driving. The youngest grandson entertains the grandparents with his 10-year-old antics. Your class councilor would like to mention those who left us in recent months: Pat Butler Dornburgh, Nancy Worden Hebert, Bill Helmer, Dick Jacobson, Evelyn Paulus Halloran, James Panton, Barbara Newcomb Reynolds, Bob Babcock, Noreen Connell Byrnes and Richard Terzian. To keep up with classmates, join us by “liking” the Class of 1953 Facebook page (https://www.facebook.com/groups/688873657809259/).

A note from your class councilor: I received a letter from Mabel Schweizer Loughlin’s daughter telling us that she passed away in March. John and Rosemary Zongrone celebrated 59 years of marriage in April. They are going to become great grandparents in October. Their 16 grandchildren range in age from 4 to 32. Mimi Webb is recovering from a stroke she suffered last year. Her visual field was reduced, which is the most challenging result of the stroke. Joan Hartman spent the bitter cold winter planning a Danube River summer cruise and a reunion with her family. Inez Mallery Parker recently returned from Sharon Springs, N.Y., where her 106-year-old mother currently resides. Inez recalls her mother and father playing host to several college friends during Inez’ years at SUNY Albany. Inez was able to reconnect with her Pierce Hall roommate.

Celebrate your milestone reunion this fall!

The classes of 2005, 1990, 1975, 1965, and 1960 will celebrate milestone reunions throughout Homecoming. The weekend is packed with events, so don’t miss the fun and the opportunity to rekindle your friendships!

Audrey Cahill Silveri; they spent time in Venice and Sarasota, Fla., reminiscing and sightseeing. Inez has nine grandchildren, four of them college graduates. The remaining grandchildren are juniors in college, and one is a high school senior. Inez and her husband recently traveled to Eugene, Ore., where one grandson was selected to participate in the Joseph Alessi Seminar. Don Voellinger is recovering from a broken hip. He is pleasantly retired and splits his time between New York City and Cape Cod. Patricia Byrne Manning, still a volunteer with 2-, 3- and 4-year-olds in nursery school, also volunteers with Hospice patients. She continues to write children’s science-book reviews for the School Library Journal. Patricia is planning an annual trip to Italy, where she will spend time in Venice, Rome, Amalfi, Sorrento, Naples, Paestum and Pompeii. Margaret Jacobson is going to be a first-time great-grandmother. Her grandson and his wife are expecting a baby girl. Margaret’s grandson recently accepted a position as assistant professor at the University of Delaware. July marked one year since the passing of Margaret’s husband, Dick Jacobson ’53. Her son lives nearby and is a big help. Gert Daly enjoyed watching the men’s and women’s UAlbany basketball and lacrosse teams this past year. Naoshi Koriyama’s translation of the 12th-century collection of Japanese tales, Konjaku Monogatari, was released by Tuttle Publishing in August under the title Japanese Tales from Times Past. Corinne Valente Moxham traveled to Idaho, Pennsylvania and New Jersey for her granddaughters’ high-school graduation ceremonies — not on the same evening, luckily! She plans to visit upstate New York and Canada before returning home to Las Cruces, N.M. Ed Osterhout and Carol recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a hot-air balloon ride over the Rio Grande in Albuquerque, N.M. They a hiked along the Rio Grande walking trail, enjoyed a tram ride in the Sandia Mountains and visited the National Lab Center. They also enjoyed a walk around Santa Fe and attended a country-rock concert in which their daughter played bass guitar. Their 45-year-old son David accompanied them on the trip, and all had a wonderful time. Richard “Dick” Bailey missed the reunion last fall, as he had back problems and couldn’t face a long plane ride. His boat, Dreamer, sank in the Pacific about a year ago while being operated by a friend. Bonnie Dodge Brousseau recently celebrated the arrival of her first great-grandchild, Kyleigh. Jim Thompson and Bill Floyd meet for lunch each month. Jim and Carol celebrated their grandsons’ graduation ceremonies at Cazenovia College and the University of Rhode Island this past spring, before heading to Tupper Lake, N.Y., for the summer. They traveled to the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., for the retirement ceremony of Jim’s son, Navy Capt. Scott Thompson ’91, in July. Scott and his family reside in Springfield, Va. In August, Jim and Carol traveled to Lincoln, Vt., where Jim officiated his granddaughter Carissa’s wedding. After living in Williamsburg, Va., for 26 years, Gladys Smith O’Mea and John relocated to Bailey’s Glen, Cornelius, N.C., to be closer to their family. They have three children, eight grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. John Granito and Dolores White Granito continue to enjoy traveling. They’re still living on Pine Island, Fla., seven months a year and at Keuka Lake for five. Last October, Dolores traveled with their oldest daughter to Slovenia, Istanbul, Venice, Sicily and Milan. John and Dolores spent Christmas with family in Mallorca, Spain. Their recent travels also included a trip to San Diego to visit a granddaughter, as well as a “Chateaux, Rivers and Wine” Viking trip in France. Their oldest granddaughter graduated from Fordham Law School this past May. Class Notes Councilors: Bernice Gunsberg Shoobe, bunnysh200@aol.com, and Joan Paul, fpaul1@nycap.rr.com

Meet Sara.

“My cousins went here and loved it,” said Sara Lucisano, “and both are very successful.” As she plans for a career as a physician’s assistant, the Chi Sigma Theta Sorority Scholarship recipient looks forward to succeeding in her life and career, as well. When she visited the University for the first time, Lucisano recalled, “I loved the campus, and I loved the opportunities that would come from attending UAlbany. Completing my senior year and graduating will be the greatest accomplishments of my life, so far.”

Lucisano, an EMT with Five Quad Volunteer Ambulance Service, is also founder and president of the campus Food Recovery Network. After graduation, she plans “to gain as much experience as I can in the healthcare field,” then apply to schools with physician’s-assistant programs. “This has been my dream since freshman year, and I have been working hard to attain it ever since.”

The Chi Sigma Theta Sorority Scholarship is keeping her focused on her goals, added Lucisano. “It means a great deal to me that I was selected for a scholarship; it has been extremely helpful to me.”

Arlene Adel-Posses and Alice Lockwood Say reunited in West Palm Beach, Fla. They had not seen each other since 1958.

A note from your class councilor: Greetings to the Green Gremlins of 1959. Ron Short and his wife have been traveling to spend time with their children and grandchildren, including to Nova Scotia, where their oldest and his family reside. Ginny Buddenhagen Guglielmone and Tito Guglielmone ’57 had a wonderful family reunion in Italy, where they visited Rome, Florence and Sorrento. Terri Vitale Bosomworth and Bob toured Australia and New Zealand in 2014; sadly, Bob passed away unexpectedly in March 2015. They loved their home in New Smyrna Beach, Fla. Carol Scheu Hackett passed away in May after a three-year battle with cancer. She and husband Art Hackett ’60 lived in Virginia and enjoyed visiting their kids and grandkids. A beautiful memorial service was held in the church where Carol led Bible studies. They attended Art’s 50th reunion in 2010. Joe Hill and Jane Bushart Hill ’60 live in central New York. They have three daughters and five grandkids. They spend winters in Las Cruces, N.M., and return to the Finger Lakes in spring. Joe taught junior-high social studies and coached wrestling; he moved to BOCES and became director of Instructional Services. He and Jane are seasoned travelers; they’ve visited Antarctica, Easter Island, Tibet, Swaziland, Cuba and Iceland. Carol Waldron Robinson and her husband live in Phoenix and have been active in real estate, but are now retired. Their two daughters have settled in Denver.

15 Minutes is all it takes to make a difference.

64 A note from your class councilor: Anyone who graduated more than 50 years ago can certainly appreciate that our contribution is a tad behind schedule. Our biggest news concerns the very successful 50th class reunion, held Oct. 10-12, 2014. It was led by class councilor Alan Minarick and guided by Loida Vera Cruz and her alumni office staff. Planning committee members Sandy Baburuchak Condojani, David Crystal, Bob Fairbanks, Bob Gibson, Columba Defrancesco Heinzelman, Evelyn “Corky” Petrick, Bill Robelee, Dave Simington and Norma Youse worked well together. The Yellow Jackets buzzed around uptown and downtown campus for activities that included the Welcome Wine Tasting, the Half-Century Club Breakfast, a tour of “our” downtown campus and an enjoyable dinner. Due to the generosity of our many classmates who sent donations, those attending the class meeting as part of the dinner gathering voted to give $8,000 towards the renovations to the Pierce Hall student lounge, which will be completed as the University prepares to celebrate the 80th anniversary of the building during Homecoming 2015. Contributions are still welcome and can be sent to the University at Albany Alumni Association, Alumni House, 1400 Washington Avenue, Albany, NY 12222-0001, clearly marked “Class of ’64 Gift.” There are a few copies of the updated directory ($7 per copy) and the class photo (3” x 5”, $3; 8” x 10”, $6) that can also be ordered. Make checks payable to the University at Albany Alumni Association. Committee member Corky Petrick left UAlbany’s reunion team to join Binghamton Central High School’s Reunion Committee. Corky has also re-immersed herself in Facebook-posting on political issues.

Bill Robelee and wife Margaret recently enjoyed lunch with David Siver ’66 and Carol Darby Siver ’65. We encourage all of you to submit news for future editions of this publication. (Yes, we really do want to hear about your accomplishments, retirement plans and grandkids!) Enjoy, stay healthy and keep in touch.

Births

Marcia J. Brown, B.A.’40

Three-time Caldecott medalist Marcia J. Brown, who delighted generations of youngsters with her illustrations and stories, died in California April 28 at the age of 96.

Determined to become an artist, the Rochester-born Brown enrolled at the former New York State College for Teachers in 1936 to major in English and drama. She later taught high school for three years before taking a position with the New York Public Library’s Central Children’s Room.

Brown’s first book, The Little Carousel, was published in 1946. Two years later, she received Caldecott Honors from the American Library Association (ALA) for Stone Soup. Between 1950 and 1954, five more of Brown’s works (Henry Fisherman, Dick Whittington and His Cat, Skipper John’s Cook, Puss in Boots and The Steadfast Tin Soldier) earned Caldecott recognition. The ALA presented her the Caldecott Medal – its most prestigious award for excellence in children’s picture-book illustrations – three times: for Cinderella, or the Little Glass Slipper (1955); Once a Mouse (1962); and Shadow (1983).

Brown, who produced more than 30 books, presented the University at Albany a collection of art books in French, German, English, Italian, Chinese and Japanese, and funds necessary for its maintenance and interpretation. Housed in the M.E. Grenander Department of Special Collections and Archives, the Marcia Brown Collection also includes watercolors, pastels, woodcuts, puppets and other creations, as well as her personal papers.

In 1969, Brown received the University at Albany Alumni Association’s Distinguished Service Award. She was awarded a doctor of letters degree from the State University of New York in 1996.

Donald E. Putterman, B.A.’52, M.A.’53

Educator Donald “Don” E. Putterman passed away June 11. He was 83.

Putterman completed undergraduate and graduate studies at the New York State College for Teachers. A retired U.S. Navy commander, he was a teacher and school administrator in several New York school districts. After retiring from his career in teaching and administration, Putterman served as interim superintendent and business manager for several districts.

A strong believer in public service and an enthusiastic supporter of the arts, Putterman was a volunteer fireman in Rotterdam, N.Y., and was a volunteer with WMHT Educational Television. He sponsored and promoted the Rotary Youth Exchange, and was a Cornell Cooperative Extension volunteer and a founding board member of The Committee for Missing Children.

Putterman, a dedicated alumnus of the University at Albany, served as president of both the Alumni Association Benevolent Association and the Class of 1952, and chairman of program planning for the Capital District alumni chapter. A longtime member of the Alumni Association Board of Directors, he received the Excellence in Alumni Service Award in 2000. The association honored him again in 2003, presenting Putterman the Excellence in Education Award.

He was predeceased by his wife, Joyce Shafer Putterman ’52, and sister, Ellice Rollins. Survivors include his daughters, Jennifer Putterman and Melissa Putterman Hoffman ’02; a brother, Dr. Sheldon Putterman; and two grandchildren.

Thomas A. Constantine, M.A.’71

Thomas A. Constantine, former New York State Police superintendent and onetime administrator of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, passed away May 3 in Pinehurst, N.C. He was 76.

A native of Buffalo, Constantine earned degrees from Erie County Community College and the State University College at Buffalo. He later enrolled at the University at Albany School of Criminal Justice, receiving a master’s degree and completing the academic requirements of the doctoral program.

Constantine began his law-enforcement career as an Erie County sheriff’s deputy. He joined the New York State Police as a uniform trooper in 1962, rising through the ranks to serve as superintendent. In 1994, former President Bill Clinton appointed Constantine administrator of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

After retiring from the DEA in 1999, Constantine joined Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy as a professor of public policy. The following year, the British government tapped him to serve as oversight commissioner for a major reform of provincial policing in Northern Ireland. In addition, he was a senior adviser to the director of Intelligence in Washington, D.C.

The University at Albany recognized Constantine in 2012 with an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Constantine’s survivors include his wife, Ruth; six children; 15 grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and a brother.

UAlbany’s Spring Commencement 2015 ceremonies, held May 16 and 17 in venues across all three campuses, celebrated the successes of more than 3,200 graduates.

The graduate class included 1,167 students. Of those:

- Multinational class members from 30 countries, including China, Kenya, Pakistan, Malaysia, Peru, Korea, Yemen, Kazakhstan, Russia and Barbados, earned advanced degrees.
- Women accounted for 57 percent of the graduates.
- The average age of class members was 29, with the oldest born in 1938 and the youngest, in 1993.
- The class included 10 military veterans.

In the undergraduate class of 2,170:

- Students earned undergraduate degrees in 56 majors.
- Degree recipients hailed from 17 countries, including China, Egypt, Great Britain, Ghana, Morocco, Thailand, Germany and Australia.
- The average age was 23; the oldest classmate was born in 1952, and the youngest, in 1995.
- At 52 percent, women represented the class majority.
- The class included 12 military veterans.

Honorary-degree recipient Barbara Smith inspired graduates not only with her words, but with her demonstrated passion for social justice. A public-service professor in UAlbany’s School of Social Welfare, Smith has received numerous awards for her work, including a nomination for the 2005 Nobel Peace Prize.

At the undergraduate ceremony, student speaker Peter Hooley ’15 – SUNY Chancellor’s Award recipient and nationally recognized hero of March Madness – received a standing ovation after his address, which he closed with a slightly modified refrain that his mum constantly reinforced before her passing this last winter: “Keep Flying, Class of 2015!”

Rosanna Garcia ’13, ’15, poses with her mother after receiving her M.S.W. at the graduate ceremony. The Office of University Events staff extend their deepest thanks for the six years of assistance she provided for their signature events, and salute her incredible achievements. We miss you so much, Rosanna!

Class of 2015 students were invited to decorate their graduation caps prior to the ceremonies. We salute their creativity!
Providing For the Future

At age 30, while expecting their first child, Jeffrey and Shelley Luks decided to make a will. The Lukses felt it was important to safeguard their family’s future. By including a bequest for a scholarship endowment at UAlbany, the young couple simultaneously made provision for future generations of students, as well.

Jeff, a Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy graduate, credits the University with “shaping me inside and outside the classroom.”

Jeff urges his fellow alumni to “get involved!” Find out how you can invest in UAlbany’s future. Contact our office today!
