Library Research in AFRICANA STUDIES - University at Albany

The interdisciplinary nature of Africana Studies requires the use of multiple subjects to cover a topic comprehensively. Relevant titles are found throughout the general collection and will not be found in only one call number area. Selected reference sources on Africa and the African diaspora in the uptown Library Reference area are the primary focus of this guide. Please refer to other handouts and subject guides from other campus libraries. Librarians are scheduled to assist you at the Reference Desk with source selections and search strategies. Please ask questions and sign up for our free classes.

To locate books and other materials, Use ADVANCE, the online catalog of the University Libraries. This catalog contains materials owned by this library including books, videos, CD=s, newspapers, microform and journal titles. To search for journal articles by topic you must search print or electronic abstracts, indexes, or bibliographies. Print sources for more current information are often duplicated in electronic databases accessible in Reference and by remote access. However, looking for information published before 1980, print and microform sources are often essential.

SUBJECT TERMS AND SEARCH STRATEGIES

Searching for Books - ADVANCE (on-line public access catalog) can help you find library materials the University at Albany owns and also provides call numbers to find where they are located. You can search by author, title, call number, journal title, organization, or subject.

When searching ADVANCE for books, it helps to know the structure of Library of Congress Subject Headings. LCSH is a list of standardized terms that most academic libraries use to catalog topics.

The Library of Congress Subject Headings bound volumes are located on high tables near the Reference Area across from the long row of ADVANCE terminals. If you obtain zero results on a particular search in ADVANCE or any other database, please see a Reference Librarian to assist you in finding appropriate terms for your topics.

The Library of Congress uses the subject heading Afro-Americans (as an adjective) or Afro-Americans not Black Americans. African Americans is a heading but does not include everything under Afro-Americans, so you may have to search both. "Blacks" as a subject heading is used to describe works on blacks as an element of the population; "Black race" is used to describe works from an anthropological point of view. Related Library of Congress subject headings include:

- Africa -- Politics and government
- Africa Relations--United States
- African Americans
- African Diaspora
- Afro-Americans--Race Identity
- Afro-Americans--Bibliography
- Afro-American Women Artists
- Afro-Americans Sources
- Afro-Americans in Mass Media
- Afro-Americans--History
- Afro-American Women--Social Conditions
- Black Power--United States
- Blacks [in combination with United States]
- Black in Literature
- Civil Rights--United States
- Colonies or Colonialism or Decolonization
- Democracy--Africa
- Developing Countries - Colonial Influence
- Imperialism or Anti-imperialist Movements
- Nationalism
- Race Discrimination
- Racism
- School Integration--United States
- Slavery--United States
- United States--Race Relations--History
- Women--Africa--Bibliography
- Women Landowners in Africa
- Women in Politics--Africa

KEYWORD SEARCHING - Many databases have a keyword option. Using this you will probably retrieve more results. Also, if you do not know specific subject headings, keywords can be searched throughout the record or the full-text article. These options vary depending on the database. Please consult with Reference librarians, especially if you have difficulty retrieving results.

Example of a simple keyword subject search or keyword title search.
ethnograph* and kinship and afr*

Example of a broad combined topic search on African Americans and Civil Rights.
(afr* or blacks or race or racial or ethnic* or minorit*) and (civil rights or discrimination or segregation or boycotts or riots or protest or social movements)

The asterisk * acts as a wild card and looks for any word/s with that root. So afr* will also find the words African Americans and Africans as well as Afro-American. Using parentheses with synonyms separated by "or" allows you to add like or related terms. Intersecting the sets of related terms with "and" allows one to search for multiple topics, while locating at least one of the "like terms" from each of the sets.

Searching For Articles by Topic

Many of the indexes and abstracts below are available via the University Libraries Web Site (http://www.library.albany.edu). To search for journal articles by topic you must search print or electronic abstracts, indexes, or full-text sources and bibliographies. Print sources are often duplicated in electronic databases and sometimes found on the Internet. As of September 2001, online journals and databases can be accessed from one large list under Databases and On-line Journals from the library home page. One can search by title for a known journal or database. However, you cannot search for articles by topic in this section. You must go to a specific subject index/database or to an individual journal site to search by topic.

Perhaps the best method is to go directly to the Research a Subject link, then choose Africana Studies (or other subject) and then click on Key Resources to find the list of key resources on a topic recommended by each Subject Librarian. Unless a database is described as only being available in the library, you can use it from any computer on campus with Web access. Use the About button to find out more about each of the databases listed.

There are several places one might have to search to find articles. Here are a few. "YES, this can be very confusing! Please feel free to call or ask for assistance at the Reference Desk!"

*Electronic Journals only available on the Internet, by scholarly associations ex) http://sdrc.lib.uiowa.edu/ejab/
*Full-text articles can be searched by topic from a particular database if the database contains full-text.
*Full-text articles appear in JSTOR or MUSE full-text journal packages. (See description below)
*Full-text articles can be searched from aggregator databases such as EBSCO or Contemporary Women=s Issues or International Index to Black Periodicals. Other databases will list citations and possibly abstracts but may not include full-text, like African Studies, Sociological Abstracts, Women=s Resources International, International Political Science Abstracts. After finding the citations in print or electronic indexes, bibliographies, reference sources, you must then check our catalog to determine if we own the journal in print and it is stored on the library shelves.
*Print indexes and abstracts

Locating Periodicals
* ADVANCE Library Catalog has only the titles of the journals we own, some online journals are currently included but not all.
* Journal titles could also be listed in an "aggregator database index" called the "Serials Solutions" list -- this list provides titles of journals and the corresponding database or index where the full-text journal appears.

Resources for African-American History, M.E. Grenander Department of Special Collections and Archives, University at Albany (http://library.albany.edu/speccoll/aaresources.htm)
Understand the differences between the World Wide Web, databases and libraries A very important resource to primary source materials held at the University at Albany. This site has links to state, local and regional collections as well.

The Web is not a database and it is not a library.

A database is a compilation of information that is organized into fields and can be searched logically, with dependable results. Databases may be library catalogs, indexes, or bibliographies, or they may be collections of statistics, directories of addresses, or inventories of merchandise stock. The common element is organization and reliable searchability.

A library is a collection of full text resources in many formats that have been selected for their quality and utility. Libraries are arranged to facilitate research and use databases to provide access to their collections.

The World Wide Web is an electronic means of accessing any information that anyone wants to put on it - academic or frivolous, commercial, altruistic, polemic. Anything goes - and does! The Web can be searched, and the fill-in-the-blank search screen looks much like its equivalent for a database. But search results on the Web can be puzzling because the Web is not set up to be searched logically. Indeed, some Web enthusiasts still militate against any kind of logical organization because it inhibits the Internet's free spirit, and many sites use unscrupulous tactics to attract hits. Gretchen Walsh, Boston University

Search Tips

Select Search the Internet, Search Engines from the Library Web Page
http://library.albany.edu/internet/searchnet.html

Example of a search engine, Metacrawler is a Meta Search Engine

When you have two concepts in an Internet search with one concept that has a phrase or a name, some search engine conventions expect the following format for best results, however, some require none. Add the second concept by placing the "and" operator "+" before each concept.

+"Precolonial Africa" +women (phrase and keyword search)
+"Women in Development" +Africa
+"Noam Chomsky" +Middle East
+"Women in Development" +Africa
+women +"underground railroad"

+kindred +"Octavia Butler"

When searching for synonyms of like terms on the Web, the standard convention is to use no operators, just a space between word or phrase
ex) "abolition movement" manumission antislavery
