Foundation Courses in U.S. History

HIS 100 (7523) (3crs)
American Political and Social History I
Hamm, Richard (rhamm@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed 9:20am-10:15am
LC 19

The modest goal of this course is to impart to you the basics of American political and social history from early European contact through the Civil War. At the same time it will also serve as an introduction to the discipline of history. When you finish the course you should have a rough understanding of the essentials of American history to 1865 and how historians use sources to construct histories of the past from primary sources.

*Note: Students registering for this course must FIRST register for one of the discussion sections below.

This course examines the social, economic and political development of the United States from the end of the Civil War to the present. It also engages students in the practice of doing history: analyzing primary documents, crafting arguments, and writing clearly and concisely. Through lectures, films, readings, and discussion, we will explore topics as varied as the racial politics of the U.S. West and U.S. South during Reconstruction, the transformative effects of American imperialism and the World Wars on the American state and economy, the rise of consumer culture, and social movements in the post-WW II era. Students will be assessed on their participation in course discussion, short writing assignments, and examinations. All students must sign up for a discussion group and for the lecture session.

HIS 101 (8603) (3crs)

This introductory course will look at how the United States attempted to put itself back together again after the Civil War, the Gilded Age era of the 1890s, the beginnings of imperialism with the Spanish-American War and the building of the Panama Canal at the turn of the twentieth century, then we'll turn our attention to the astonishing levels of immigration and the rapid rise of urbanization and industrialization at the same time, the economic and social problems of the Great Depression, the New Deal, World War II, the post-war world, the Cold War, the 1950s and the social rebellion of the 1960s, a terrible economic downturn in the 1970s, and the turn toward conservatism in the 1980s. The course finishes by looking at the presidencies of Bill Clinton and George W. Bush. As a fully online course, there are no class lectures. Instead, students will use text and chapter readings, explanatory PowerPoint slideshows, and lots of fabulous documentaries. There are many opportunities to affect the course grade: students will watch and respond to documentaries, keep a historical journal, and take weekly quizzes, a midterm and a final exam. Assistance will always be available through email.
HIS 101 (7921) (3crs)
American Political and Social History II
Kozakiewicz, Laurie (lkozakiewicz@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed 11:30am-12:25pm
LC 19

This course introduces students to the political, economic, social, and cultural changes that have revolutionized American life from the end of the Civil War to the present. Themes covered include the growing influence of the federal government at home and abroad, the impact of immigration and industrialization on American society, and the emergence of a mass consumption economy. We also consider how differences of gender, race, and ethnicity affect people’s ability to be equal partners in America’s growth. Students have a midterm and a final as well as testing on primary sources.

HIS 224 (7945) (3crs)
Nonfiction Media Storytelling
Bernard, Sheila Curran (sbernard@albany.edu)
Tues, Thurs 4:15pm-5:35pm
FA 126
*Cross-listed with ADOC 224(7946).

Course focus Fall 2018 is history. The course explores the use of narrative in books, films, and other works intended to present factual (historical) content to the general public. Students will watch, read about, write about, and discuss a range of work, developing tools for analyzing and evaluating nonfiction media in terms of both content and craft. They will also write and share their own narrative works based on primary and secondary source research. Prerequisite(s): Successful prior completion of at least one undergraduate U.S. history course is recommended.
HIS 251 (4641) (3crs)
Introduction to Documentary Studies
McCormick, Susan (smccormick@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed 2:45pm-4:05pm
LC 3B
Cross-listed with ADOC 251 (4663)

What is a documentary? This class explores the history, key characteristics, best examples, and notable practitioners of non-fiction documentary storytelling across multiple forms. Documentary work—non-fiction storytelling—is much more than film and video; it also includes photography, audio, narrative non-fiction/text, and new media/multimedia efforts. We will examine the social, cultural, legal, and ethical aspects of documentary production, both historical and contemporary; major themes and genres in documentary work; and the role of technology in shaping both production and distribution of documentaries over time. As the required gateway course for the Documentary Studies major and minor, the course looks at documentary work in both the recent and distant past, providing a foundation for future work in the major and minor. Those enrolled in HIS 251 will bring an historical focus to their work in the course.

Technology and Society in America
Hochfelder, David (dhochfelder@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed, Fri 12:35pm-1:30pm
LC 3A

This course outlines the relationship between technological innovation and social change in the United States from the colonial period to the present. Major questions we will investigate include:

- How has technology shaped the contours of American history?
- How has society shaped technology?
- What political controversies or economic conflicts have arisen with the introduction of new technologies? Who gains and who loses?
- What is the relationship between technological progress, economic growth, and energy abundance?

HIS 277 (9845) (3crs)  Culture and History of Food in the United States

Smith-Howard, Kendra (ksmith-Howard@albany.edu)

Tue, Thu 1:15pm-2:35pm
LC 3B

Food. It sustains our lives, patterns our daily rhythms, and shapes our landscape. This course asks students to think historically about food and agriculture in the United States. Central to American political, economic, scientific, and social developments, food offers a unique way to trace the history of the nation. This course examines changes in techniques and technologies of food and agriculture, policies used to govern foods, and ways in which social communities and values have shaped these changes. You will gain a historic perspective of the foods you eat. Further, you will demonstrate the basic skills of history: analyzing primary documents, recognizing patterns and historical trends, and crafting tightly-argued and clearly-written essays.

HIS 290 (6397) (3crs)  History of Marriage and Family in the U.S.

Graves, Kori (kgraves@albany.edu)

Mon, Wed, Fri 9:20am-10:15am
LC 3B

The family is a dynamic social unit that is constantly evolving to satisfy individual and community needs. The family is also a unit of political significance and throughout United States history, local, state, and national governments have affected Americans’ home lives. Consequently the structure and function of families in the U.S. have changed in response to both national and international events. In this course will consider how, when, and why so-called private family affairs became relevant in public and political contexts. We will also interrogate contemporary explanations for changes in U.S. families by comparing popular ideas with the historical trends that shaped marriage and family life. Through an evaluation of topics including birth control, adoption, interracial marriage, and divorce, this course explores the ways that family matters have influenced and informed changes in peoples’ understandings of gender, ethnicity, nationality, race, and status in the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries.

HIS 290 (7622) (3crs)  Early New York History: From Settlement to Civil War

Kozakiewicz, Laura (lkozakiewicz@albany.edu)

Mon, Wed, Fri 10:25am-11:25am
HU 137

New York has a story to tell about her unique origins and significant impact on America’s development. It is a story of culture, economics, politics and wars that we examine through lectures, readings, and discussion. The course begins with early settlement, continues through the American Revolution and New York’s emergence as an economic powerhouse in the early 19th century due to the Erie Canal, and finishes with the impact of the Civil War on New York.

HIS 235 (8868) (3crs)
Early and Medieval Christianity

Nold, Patrick (pnold@albany.edu)
Tue, Thu 11:45am-1:05pm
ED 120

This course will cover the history of Christianity from the apostles to the Reformation. It is common to think of the Reformation as a complete break with the Middle Ages. We shall see that it is not. The core of the course will consist of lectures and weekly discussion texts starting with sections of the New Testament and continuing through the Patristic period and the Middle Ages to the Reformation. There will be a two in-class mid-term examinations and an in-class final examination. The format of the examinations will be identification questions requiring short narrative answers.
HIS 244 (7095) (3crs)  Zionism, Palestine, and Israel in Historical Perspective
Brenner, Arthur (ABrenner@albany.edu)
Tues, Thurs 11:45am-1:05pm
ES 241
*Cross-listed with AHEB 244 & JST 244 (7064)

This course will examine the history of the Zionist movement from its inception until the establishment of the State of Israel in 1948, and the history of Israel from 1948 to the present. It covers the development of various Zionist ideologies and organizations as well as their challengers within and outside the Jewish community. It will examine the history of Jewish settlement in Palestine, the founding of the state of Israel, and the country's subsequent development. The course will also examine some contemporary issues facing the country. This course includes a mixture of lecture and discussion.

HIS 250 (8607) (3crs)  The Holocaust in History
Brenner, Arthur (abrenner@albany.edu)
Tues, Thu 8:45am-10:05am
HU 132
*Cross-listed with AJST 250 (8610)

Begins with an overview of European Jewish life on the eve of the attempt at its destruction, examines the cultural, social and intellectual roots of Nazism, and discusses the efforts to isolate and marginalize those marked as “a-socials” in German society. Explores the radicalization of the Nazi program and investigates the variety of ways targeted groups responded to the crises. Covers a number of survivor accounts and the memorialization and politicization of the Nazi Holocaust in the United States and Israel.

HIS 253 (9596) (3crs)  Medieval Jews Among Muslims and Christians
Francesconi, Federica (ffrancesconi@albany.edu)
Tues, Thurs 1:15pm-2:35pm
LC 3A
*Cross-listed with A JST 253 (9595)

This class explores Jewish history from the rise of Christianity until the middle of the seventeenth century. We examine the various ways that Jews endeavored to preserve their communal structures and religious obligations in the absence of territorial cohesion. At the center of our investigation is the experience of Jews between and among the major religious and cultural systems under which they lived, Islam and Christianity. The course charts the development of both Sephardi and Ashkenazi Jewry, noting the important social, religious, cultural, and political characteristics of each community, as well as the nature of their interaction with two great world civilizations.

HIS 256 (8608) (3crs)  Women in European History
Francesconi, Federica  (ffrancesconi@albany.edu)
Tue, Thu 4:15pm-5:35pm
HU 137

Survey of the role and position of women in European society from antiquity to the present, concentrating on social, economic, political, and intellectual aspects of women’s lives and on cultural attitudes and ideologies concerning women. We will discuss the meanings, challenges, successes, struggles and advancements of women from diverse social, economic and ethnic backgrounds, cultural pursuits, and political interests. Thus, during the course we would also engage in rescuing “her-story,” as until the recent decades, women’s contribution to the making of history was left untold and not analyzed.

HIS 286 (7328) (3crs)  African Civilizations

Kitissou, Marcel (mkitissou@albany.edu)

Tue & Thu 11:45am-1:05pm
HU 24
*Cross-listed with AFS 286

This course is part of the International Perspectives General Education category. It offers an introductory survey of African history from the earliest times to 1800. It explores Africa’s rich and diverse pre-colonial past with particular attention to political and social changes including the role of leadership and the lives of ordinary men and women. It also explains the role of Africa in world history and, at the intersection of geography and politics, critically examines the interactions of the continent with outside forces with special focus on the sub-Saharan region. In this regard, the course specifically explores the pull and push factors that are the basis of the African Diaspora including the trans-Atlantic trade and other processes that may explain the current state of Africa’s social, political and economic development.

This course studies modern and contemporary Africa, surveying historical developments from the period of European colonization in the nineteenth century to contemporary period. It is concerned with how such historical developments as colonization, new economic and political systems, Christianization, western education, urbanization, nationalism and independence affected societies and changed people’s lives. Also, the course examines relations within Africa, issues of unity and stability, population growth and urbanization, and Africa’s relations with the rest of the world. While it emphasizes effects of colonial and post-independence conditions, discussing significance of internal factors in determining conditions in Africa, the course focuses on problems of everyday life, gender issues, and contemporary difficulties in environment, politics, economy and social life. Finally, it highlights achievement of African peoples, self-development and prospects for the future.

Tue, Thurs 8:45am-10:05am

HU 20

This class will use original documents to study the differences in the experiences of the Spanish, English, Dutch, and French in the New World. In particular we will study the discovery, conquest, and settlement of Mexico, Peru, Virginia, New Amsterdam, New England, and New Spain. The colonists and governments produced hundreds of documents telling of their experiences. We will read these, in translation, to see what the earliest Europeans on these two continents thought and felt about their experience. The work of the class will revolve around the discussion of the documents and what they can tell us about the early history of European colonies in South and North America.

Mon, Wed 2:45pm-4:05pm
HU 137

This seminar is a methods course that prepares students to succeed as they transition from foundational to advanced coursework in the History Department. It will teach students how to ask appropriate research questions, collect evidence using the university’s research tools, and choreograph that evidence to advance a persuasive argument. Prerequisites: history major, completed foundational work, and AHIS 489Z.

HIS 310 (10022) (3crs)  History of Women in the United States
Graves, Kori (kgraves@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed, Fri 11:30pm-12:25pm
FA 126

As mothers, activists, laborers, institution builders, and reformers, women have pushed to eliminate gender inequality in U.S. laws and customs. Collectively, these efforts have resulted in dramatic changes in women’s lives. However, the advances made by some have created the conditions for greater inequality between women based on differences of class, status, race, ethnicity, and sexuality. This survey will consider the reasons for this seeming contradiction by exploring the nature of women’s involvement in U.S. political, social, economic, and cultural institutions from the 17th century to the present. Through the analysis of primary documents, scholarly journal articles, monographs, and popular media, students will investigate topics that expose the significance of work, reform movements, family life, education, and politics in determining a woman’s place in U.S. society.

HIS 313 (9850) (3crs)  Constitutional History of the United States
Wittern-Keller, Laura (lwittern-keller@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed 2:45pm-4:05pm
ES 245

How is it possible that the world's shortest constitution—a mere 7,000 words—has provided a successful blueprint for the US government? The United States Constitution is not only brief, but it is also the longest lasting of any government in the world. What is the secret to that success? When has it created "a more perfect union" and when has it left the United States a less-than perfect union? Over the decades, how have those 7,000 words been interpreted? Those questions will be the focus of this course. To understand the Constitution's record, we will look in-depth at four main times when the government shifted significantly: the creation and ratification of the Constitution between 1787 and 1791, the adoption of and subsequent interpretation of the post-Civil War amendments, the major interpretational shift of the 1930s, and the rights revolution of the 1950s forward. Since changing interpretation of those 7,000 words has been critical to American society, the Supreme Court and its justices will play starring roles.

HIS 314 (9851) (3crs)  The Progressive Generation 1900-1932
Smith-Howard, Kendra (ksmith-howard@albany.edu)
Tue & Thu 8:45am-10:05am
SS 256

This course will intensively examine the history of the United States in the first few decades of the twentieth century. We will look especially at how Americans of the era tackled the following questions:

- What would be the role of the United States in the world?
- How would Americans define the freedoms and constraints of public life, particularly in reference to ethnicity, race, class, and gender?
- How would the new patterns of work and leisure reshape the economy and lived experience of American life?

In addition to enhancing students’ understanding of the period in U.S. history, students will be expected to hone their ability to analyze primary documents, identify historical arguments, write cogently and concisely, and engage in historical research.

Capitalism in America
Hochfelder, Dave (dhochfelder@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed, Fri 10:25am-11:20am
LC 3A

This course investigates the history of capitalism in America from multiple social positions and cultural perspectives. We engage with several questions. What does the history of capitalism tell us about the nature of the American democratic experiment? Why didn’t a socialist or labor party take root here as in Western Europe? Is success and failure a consequence of personal characteristics or of larger social and economic forces? To address these questions we will use a wide range of sources, including fiction and film.

American Identity Since the Civil War
Bon Tempo, Carl (CBontempo@albany.edu)
Tue & Thu 11:45am-1:05pm
LC 3B

This course examines how and why different Americans living during the twentieth century conceived of their nation’s identity. In other words, we will explore how Americans have answered the question: “Who is an American?” Two suppositions form the foundation of the class. First, national identity is historically contingent and fluid. Second, conceptions of national identity often reflected the political, economic, social, cultural, racial, and gendered dynamics of U.S. society. I recommend that students take either the U.S. history survey or a course in twentieth century American history before enrolling in this course. Students will read about 100 pages a week (books, primary sources, and articles) and assignments will include discussion participation, exams, and a paper.

Tue 2:45pm-5:35pm
BBB 002
Cross-listed with DOC 323 (7632)

This course will ground students in the fundamentals of researching, planning, shooting, and editing digital video. Students will work individually and in teams on exercises assigned by the instructor. The course offers a comprehensive introduction to the basics of documentary film production, and as such provides a foundation for all students interested in documentary media, including those who go on to work in historical and non-historical content areas such as social issue, ethnographic, scientific, or political documentary. Students will develop a solid hands-on understanding of the basic tools of media storytelling and choices involved, thus enhancing their overall media literacy.

History of the Chinese Economy
DeBlasi, Anthony (adeblasi@albany.edu)
Tues, Thurs 5:45pm-7:05pm
HU 20

This course focuses on the development of the Chinese economy from its Neolithic period to economic reform in the twenty-first century. The goal is to understand the dynamics that produced distinctive patterns in the evolution of China’s economy. At the same time, students will understand how a grasp of basic economic concepts can illuminate China’s broader historical experience. Topics of special interest include the relationship between technological innovation and economic life, distinctive forms of economic organization in China, the impact of government policy on the private economy, China’s experiment with state socialism, and the prospects for the so-called “socialist market economy.”

Democracy and Inequality in Latin America

In recent years, a growing number of scholars have viewed the growing inequality in the US with alarm, and argued that the more unequal we grow, the weaker our democracy becomes. The evidence they use to make this argument often originates in Latin America, which has long struggled both with markedly high levels of inequality and weak democratic institutions. In this course we question that link, asking ourselves two critical questions. First, what are the historical origins of inequality in Latin America? And second, how can we link this history of inequality to the democratic challenges the region has faced in the past, and continues to confront in the present?
Senior Research Seminar

Pastore, Christopher (cpastore@albany.edu)

Mon 2:45pm-5:35pm
SLG 24

Focusing on the time period between first European contact and the U.S. Civil War, this seminar teaches advanced undergraduate students the fundamentals of research in the fields of early American and the Atlantic world history. Students will pursue an original research project based on primary sources and careful review of the existing secondary literature. We will read texts that will serve as models of historical composition, and through drafting and discussion we will hone our skills as writers and editors. Students are encouraged to pursued topics that interest them, which may include (but are not limited to) the history of Native American and European encounters, slavery, the American Revolution, political and economic development, race, gender, class, religion, the environment, and war. Students will write a 15- to 20-page essay and present their findings to the class. Permission of instructor required.

Tue 2:45pm-5:35pm
SLG 24

In this intensive research and writing-based U.S. history research seminar, senior history majors will move from their roles as consumers of knowledge to new roles as producers of knowledge by researching, writing, and presenting an article relative to law and order in the United States. During the semester, students will become working historians, asking questions of original sources such as primary archival and web-based documents, analyzing the answers, and presenting the findings in an article of fifteen to twenty pages. Each phase of creating a scholarly article will be guided starting with the choice of topic and moving to the proposal, bibliography, outline, first draft, final draft, and presentation. The research focus of this seminar will be people who have made a difference in American law (making law, enforcing law, or interpreting law): not the Earl Warren or Elliot Ness variety, but people whose contributions may have been overlooked. Sources at the Grenander Archives and the New York State Library will offer many possibilities from crusading women lawyers to convicted criminals, activists, politicians—both conservative and liberal—judges, and authors.
Independent research on a topic related to military history during any chronological period. Students will develop an original argument constructed on a foundation of primary source material and framed by wide readings in secondary literature. The process will include a prospectus outlining your planned topic, an in-class presentation, and a draft copy, with the final goal being a 15-20 page thesis.

Military history for the purposes of this seminar will be defined extremely broadly. It could include traditional projects such as tactics, strategy, organization, and leadership, as well as broader questions relating to the impact of organized violence on human societies, taking into account issues such as the state and governance, science and technology, gender and sexuality, race and ethnicity, culture and identity, etc.

Senior Honors Course

Senior Honors Thesis

Preparation of a substantial honors thesis under the supervision of a member of the Department of History. Students present periodic progress reports, criticize each other’s work, and deliver an oral summary of the completed thesis. Manon, Naomi (nmanon@albany.edu)
Mon, Wed, Fri 12:35-1:30pm
AS 14

This class explores the dynamic history of the Jewish people and its interaction with great world cultures. Beginning with the origins of Israelite monotheism, we will first trace the consolidation and subsequent fragmentation of the ancient Israelites. We then explore several dispersed Jewish communities through the Middle Ages, and examine the ways they redefined themselves and Judaism in light of their experiences in several different host societies. Finally, we examine the Jewish encounter with the Modern world, including the Jewish Enlightenment, the nationalization of the Jews, the rise of new Jewish centers on the eve of the Nazi Holocaust, and Judaism as it is expressed in contemporary America and Israel.

This class explores Jewish history from the rise of Christianity until the middle of the seventeenth century. We examine the various ways that Jews endeavored to preserve their communal structures and religious obligations in the absence of territorial cohesion. At the center of our investigation is the experience of Jews between and among the major religious and cultural systems under which they lived, Islam and Christianity. The course charts the development of both Sephardi and Ashkenazi Jewry, noting the important social, religious, cultural, and political characteristics of each community, as well as the nature of their interaction with two great world civilizations.

Cross-listed with AHIS 224(7945).

Course focus Fall 2018 is history. The course explores the use of narrative in books, films, and other works intended to present factual (historical) content to the general public. Students will watch, read about, write about, and discuss a range of work, developing tools for analyzing and evaluating nonfiction media in terms of both content and craft. They will also write and share their own narrative works based on primary and secondary source research. Prerequisite(s): Successful prior completion of at least one undergraduate U.S. history course is recommended.
This course examines strategies for making good ethical decisions in newsgathering and writing as well as the laws that pertain to daily journalism and public relations. The course covers the major ethical theories and philosophies and the major legal cases that journalists must know. Emphasis will be on actual cases and hypothetical situations encountered in daily journalism. The course pays special attention to some of the most common dilemmas — libel, free press/fair trial conflicts, anonymous sources, and publishing content that can harm people. This class is restricted to Journalism, Documentary Studies and History majors and minors.

What is a documentary? This class explores the history, key characteristics, best examples, and notable practitioners of non-fiction documentary storytelling across multiple forms. Documentary work—non-fiction storytelling—is much more than film and video; it also includes photography, audio, narrative non-fiction/text, and new media/multimedia efforts. We will examine the social, cultural, legal, and ethical aspects of documentary production, both historical and contemporary; major themes and genres in documentary work; and the role of technology in shaping both production and distribution of documentaries over time. As the required gateway course for the Documentary Studies major and minor, the course looks at documentary work in both the recent and distant past, providing a foundation for future work in the major and minor. Those enrolled in HIS 251 will bring an historical focus to their work in the course.

Students will explore a variety of narrative journalistic styles, with emphasis on compelling narrative and description, combined with the skillful use of quotes and dialogue. A variety of formats will be studied: newspapers, magazines, and excerpts from non-fiction books. Readings for the course include works mostly by contemporary writers and those from the past. Students submit near weekly writing assignments geared toward understanding narrative style and writing narrative. Only one version of A JRL 308Z may be taken for credit. Prerequisite(s): A JRL 200Z, or permission of instructor.

*Cross-listed with HIS 334 (7631)

This course will ground students in the fundamentals of researching, planning, shooting, and editing digital video. Students will work individually and in teams on exercises assigned by the instructor. The course offers a comprehensive introduction to the basics of documentary film production, and as such provides a foundation for all students interested in documentary media, including those who go on to work in historical and non-historical content areas such as social issue, ethnographic, scientific, or political documentary. Students will develop a solid hands-on understanding of the basic tools of media storytelling and choices involved, thus enhancing their overall media literacy.

DOC 380 (7019) (3crs)  Photojournalism
VanAcker, Katherine (kvvanacker@albany.edu)
Thurs 4:15pm-7:05pm
SLG 03
* Cross-listed with JRL 380

Photojournalism is a digital photography workshop. Students are taught the fundamentals, theory and practices of photojournalism through lectures, readings, writings and practical photography assignment work. Students are required to photograph weekly assignments and present their work for group critique. Students produce a final project that they research, photograph and execute in a multi-media format which demonstrates the breadth of material and techniques covered over the course of the semester. Because the class has a multi-media component, students will use a combination of their still photography along with audio that they record and edit to create audio slideshows to further advance their photojournalism narrative storytelling skills. Some prior photography experience is recommended. A digital SLR camera is required for this class. The software you will use for this class includes PhotoShop, audio editing software like Audacity or Garage Band, video and multimedia software like iMove, Windows Movie Maker, Final Cut, Sony Vegas and SoundSlides and is available on various computers throughout campus. Open only to JRL Majors/Minors and DOC Majors.
Special Projects and Internship in Documentary Studies
Zahavi, Gerald (gzahavi@albany.edu)
Arranged

This is a course designed for students interested in engaging in documentary fieldwork and production projects through internships with on-campus and off-campus organizations, or on their own with close faculty supervision. Students should already have the specific production skills (e.g. filmmaking, photography, audio recording/editing, hypermedia authoring) necessary for the project or internship they wish to undertake. Typical projects or internship they wish to undertake. Typical projects or internships might involve mounting documentary photography exhibits, participating in documentary editing projects (including online, nonfiction journals), designing virtual museums and podcasting/video-casting websites, or working as production members on film/video or radio projects. Credit load will depend on the level of engagement and time obligations associated with the specific project undertaken by the student. This course may be repeated for a total of 6 credits. Prerequisite(s): junior or senior standing, a minimum GPA of 2.50, and permission of the instructor. S/U graded.

An introduction to the religious, philosophical, and artistic tradition of Zen Buddhism in China, Korea, and Japan and the West. This course looks at the birth and subsequent historical evolution of the Zen or Ch’an school of Buddhism in East Asia. We will look at the intersection of: Buddhist and Chinese presumptions about spirituality that gave rise to this unusual religious form, discussing precisely what is and is not iconoclastic about its tenets. The experience of American Zen communities will also be considered.

This course explores how cultural anthropologists approach the diversity of human religious expression, including those aspects typically labeled magic and witchcraft. As anthropologists we are not concerned with theological or philosophical searches for “ultimate truths” but, instead, with how religion functions in society, how it creates meaningful worlds within which people live their lives, and also how conflicts and struggles for power are played out in religious terms. We are interested in general patterns of thought and behavior, as well as culturally distinct creations. Rather than a survey course with a textbook, the class is organized around topics of long and ongoing interest in the anthropological study of religion: belief, ritual, myth, shamanism, witchcraft, and others. For each topic, we will read a small number of original ethnographic studies, including both “classic” ground-breaking works from the past and more recent research, to see how these key subjects have been viewed over time and continue to be relevant in the present. The class also includes films, in-class projects, short papers, and a group research project and presentation.
