Introduction: Purpose of the I-9

- The I-9 is used to document and verify that employees (hired after November 6, 1986) are eligible to work in the U.S.
- All U.S. employers are required to complete Form I-9 with any person hired to perform labor or services in the U.S. in return for wages or other remuneration.
- Using Form I-9, employees attest to their employment authorized status, and present their supporting documents to their employer.
- Employers attest that the supporting documents are genuine, and sufficiently demonstrate the employee's identity and eligibility to work in the U.S.

Unlawful Discrimination

Unlawful discrimination occurs when an employer treats employees differently based on their citizenship, immigration status or national origin in regard to hiring, firing, or recruitment.

Unlawful Discrimination

To avoid unlawful discrimination during the I-9 process:

- Never make assumptions about a person's eligibility to work based on his or her name, place of birth, country of origin, ancestry, native language, accent, or because he or she is perceived as looking or sounding "foreign."
- Never require that an employee complete the I-9 before an offer of employment has been made.
- Never refuse to accept a document, or refuse to hire an individual, because a document has a future expiration date.

Unlawful Discrimination

- Never require that an employee present specific documents.
 - Employees are free to choose any list A document or combination of lists B and C documents.
 - We may reject documents or request additional documents only when the presented documents are clearly inconsistent or insufficient.
