Community Rights and Responsibilities is the official code of conduct outlining behavioral expectations for University at Albany students. The University has developed this code of standards and expectations, consistent with its purpose as an educational institution and requires that each student accept responsibility for their own behavior and consequences. These regulations and the procedures for their enforcement apply to all student conduct and behavior. Students are responsible to uphold the standards outlined in the code and shall be familiar with the code. These specific regulations should not be viewed as a comprehensive code of desirable conduct; rather they describe the minimum standards.

Loss of Recognition Status

Unfortunately, some fraternities/sororities engage in behaviors inconsistent with the expectations and policies of the institution and/or national organization. While many of these organizations typically cease all activity, some may present themselves as fully functional organizations which continue to recruit members. The University at Albany urges students and their family members to avoid groups currently functioning without university recognition. Those with concerns regarding activities of these organizations should contact Student Involvement.
