

Lecture Series

RACIAL ANIMUS AND PERCEPTIONS OF CRIME AND JUSTICE

Kevin Drakulich, Ph.D.

Associate Professor of Criminology and Criminal Justice
Northeastern University

Thursday, November 5 at 5:15 pm
Milne Hall, Room 200
University at Albany Downtown Campus

Kevin Drakulich is a 2014 recipient of the National Institute of Justice's W.E.B. Du Bois Fellowship and the 2014 New Scholar Award from the American Society of Criminology's Division of People of Color and Crime.

His recent work focuses on three interrelated lines of research. The first examines social processes related to crime and its consequences across space—and in particular across neighborhoods or communities. A second line of research builds on the first by asking how people view crime, disorder, and social control processes within their community. Finally, a third line of research follows this line of thought beyond neighborhoods, examining how people view crime, control, and related policies more broadly. Underlying all three of these lines of research are questions related to two overarching themes: race and racism, and interpersonal interactions and relationships.

Light refreshments will be served.

Many thanks to our generous sponsors and partners.