

University
Art Museum

Tuesday, February 26
10 a.m. - 7 p.m.

Wikipedia Edit-a-thon— Art + Feminism 2019

Did you know that Wikipedia content is skewed by lack of female participation?

You can help change that by joining the University at Albany Art Museum Edit-a-thon, a community organized event that teaches how to edit, update, and add articles on Wikipedia.

Join us to make contributions to Wikipedia that directly relate to the exhibition on view Carrie Schneider: Rapt (February 1 – April 6, 2019). In Schneider's ongoing series Reading Women, the artist approached one hundred of her friends—including artists, writers and musicians—to read a text of their choice, written by a woman author, while she captured the process in video and on film. The readers will be the focus of the Wikipedia entries and all featured titles will be available in the Museum.

Bring your laptop and power cord. We will provide tutorials for the beginner Wikipedian and reference materials about the women who are the readers in the exhibition. Students, faculty, staff, and community members of all gender identities and expressions are invited to participate. Guests can stay for under an hour or for the entire day.

It's a good idea to create a Wikipedia account in advance. For additional information, and to RSVP visit: http://www.artandfeminism.org/?s=albany+art+museum&post_type=events

Contact: Naomi Lewis
nlewis@albany.edu

Co-sponsored by
Information Literacy Department,
University Libraries

