Lynette Tannis, Ph.D.

Harvard Graduate School of Education

Dr. Lynette N. Tannis began her education career more than two decades ago and has served in myriad educational roles including teacher, athletic coach, literacy coordinator, school/district administrator, professional developer, researcher, lecturer, education consultant, and education delegate throughout the United States and within five continents – Africa, Asia, Europe, North America, and South America.

She is the author of Educating Incarcerated Youth: Exploring the Impact of Relationships, Expectations, Resources and Accountability (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014) and is recognized as a juvenile justice education expert and an expert on school leadership and literacy.

Dr. Tannis teaches a course she designed, titled, Educating Incarcerated Youth: Practice, Research, Policy, and Advocacy. She also conducts research for HGSE's Partnership for Just Educators. Her work as an adjunct lecturer, researcher, and independent education consultant focuses on ensuring all children — free or incarcerated — receive the free high-quality public education they deserve.

Dr. Tannis holds both an Ed.D. in Urban Superintendency (2013) and an Ed.M. in Education Policy and Management (2010) from Harvard University, a M.A. in Educational Administration (2003) from Kean University, and a B.A. in Elementary Education (1995) from Greensboro College.
