Paul Taylor, Ph.D.

University of Colorado Denver

Paul Taylor is an assistant professor of criminal justice in the School of Public Affairs at the University of Colorado Denver. His research focuses on police decision-making, human performance, and system safety in the context of police/citizen encounters with an eye toward improving outcomes.

Paul has over 10 years of practical law enforcement experience, including time as an in-service instructor, field-training officer, patrol sergeant, and department training manager. He is actively engaged in police research and training across the country and regularly presents to both academic and practitioner audiences.

Paul's early research received awards from the American Society of Criminology and the Division of Policing at the American Society of Criminology. He works closely with a number of local, state and federal law enforcement agencies in a wide range of consulting and training roles.

Paul is a Colorado native who received his B.A. in criminal justice from the University of Colorado Denver, School of Public Affairs before going on to complete his M.A. and Ph.D. in criminal justice at the University at Albany, State University of New York.
