¹ Publication norms differ both within and across the public affairs subfields. In my collaborations, work is often divided up equally, with authorship in alphabetical order (and indicated with #). In other instances, when an author takes on more work, the order of authorship reflects that. When I work with students on my research (indicated with *), they generally contribute less and are second or third author, participating in the research for developmental and training purposes. When students and I work on a topic where they take the lead on, they are first authors. In these cases, the published work might be topically related to but are not the doctoral student's candidacy paper(s) nor included in their dissertation, for which I expect the student to be the sole author.
