As Director of Upstate Operations and Program Research, I was responsible for oversight of, and liaison among, state regional offices and hundreds of private agencies and local governments delivering services to people with disabilities. Major areas of my responsibilities included operational, fiscal and regulatory issues as well as management of a wide variety of public-private agency and inter-governmental relations. I directed research teams that developed key components of rate-setting formulas, analyzed the effectiveness of services, studied the implementation of programs, and examined the financing, organization and administration of services. Prior to this position I served in a number of research, research administration, budget, and management positions in New York State government. I have been a consultant to several states, national organizations, and the federal government on organizational change and policy and program development. I have also been a consultant on these issues in the United Kingdom, Sweden and Hungary.

As Public Service Professor in the Department of Public Administration and Policy of the Rockefeller College at the University of New York at Albany I teach graduate courses in public administration, political science, and health policy. I have also taught similar courses at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Union College, and the SUNY School of Public Health. I serve on dissertation and thesis committees, and I am on the editorial boards of the Journal of Disability Policy Studies and the Tizard Learning Disability Review (UK)
