The landscape of scholarly publishing and the development of educational resources is changing. In response to these changes, the Office of the Provost formed two campus-wide working groups to address “openness” at UAlbany. The first group, the Open Access Policy Working Group, is in the process of developing (at the direction of the SUNY Board of Regents) a campus-level open access policy for faculty, student, and staff scholarship and creative works. This policy will be presented to the University Senate for review and approval during Fall 2019. The second group, the Open Educational Resources (OER) Working Group, continues to develop support for instructors who would like to include more openly licensed teaching materials in their courses. In this open forum, a panel of four members from these working groups will describe their experiences with devising/initiating an open access policy and providing access to open educational resources at the University at Albany, and you will have the opportunity to share your feedback and recommendations for these ongoing processes.
